Nonetheless, I understand that negotiations continue, perhaps even as we speak, in an attempt to arrive at some conclusion, some amendments that might be the final package of negotiated provisions that would end the remaining controversy.

I am not that easily satisfied unless the patent laws of the United States are kept reasonably intact with respect to the preservation of the protection of intellectual property. Any time we reduce that too seriously, we are cutting the ground out from under our negotiators in the international process that I described a moment ago that goes on and on.

The amendment process is a part of the legislative process to which we often give too little attention, but the amendment process could be used to improve H.R. 3605 to where, practically speaking, I do not think there would be any opposition to the bill. But we have encountered an attitude in the Committee on the Judiciary that says, "Oh, no, you cannot," and somehow along partisan lines the votes fell in the Committee on the Judiciary.

That is an oddity because this is not a partisan matter, from what I understand. I do not know of any reason for Democrats and Republicans to generically view the bill from different aspects, different points of view. But in the Committee on the Judiciary, all attempts at amendment were rebuffed, and where votes were taken, they were along party lines.

Why should that be? I think it is the stubbornness that arises out of the arrogance of power when the majority party has been in power too long, and reason is pushed aside, logic is pushed aside, and power takes over. All right. That is the way it seems to function all too frequently. It does not mean it is right and it does not mean that it is making good law.

I would just like to suggest, for example, another gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DEWINE,] earlier pointed out that the Bolar case is being overturned by this bill, a case that really precipitated the conclusion of the earlier negotiations on this bill. That case made it clear that the law all along really was, as most everyone in patent field thought it was, that someone who does not own a patent cannot put the patented product to a commercial use during the life of the patent, and that includes testing it and preparing it for marketing to begin as soon as the patent expires.

The Bolar case, then, will be overruled by this bill, H.R. 3605, in that this bill would provide that the generic drug manufacturers can start playing around with the drug on which the patent is about to expire within a year. They can use that year to get ready for the marketplace. If they did it right now, they would be violating the patent rights of the patent holder.

That is one of the areas that ought to be, it seems to me, addressed intelligently, not on a prejudiced basis, not on a partisan basis; it is not a partisan issue. I do not think there is really a partisan issue in the whole bill that would be addressed by any of the amendments that I have filed for printed in the RECORD. I only filed those for the purpose of protecting the right to have those amendments considered because we are here at a time when we are just about to recess for the month of August and until after Labor Day. The patience of the Members of the House is becoming short already. It will be shorter tomorrow and the day after, and certainly limitations on time will be sought and imposed.

If the important considerations that are the subject matter of amendments to be considered to this bill are not going to be considered carefully, at least we are guaranteeing that they have 5 minutes for each amendment to be considered. I certainly hope we are not pressed to that procedure. There are some amendments that can be blocked together, if we can just be assured that there will be consideration of those amendments, rather than simply brushing them off. I have no reason to expect that we will receive such consideration or any commitment to it.

Therefore, at this point I simply propose to go through it bit by bit, something that should have been done in committee, something that was brushed off in committee, and I hope that the bill can be improved and we can all join in support of H.R. 3605.

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Drug Price Competition and Patent Term Restoration Act of 1984. I urge my colleague to vote in favor of final passage of this measure. This bill will benefit both the industry and consumers.

The pharmaceutical industry in the United States has long been an important element of our economic physical well-being. American pharmaceutical companies have long led the world in the research and development of new drugs and therapies for our citizens. Moreover, American pharmaceutical companies contribute to our economy through both direct employment and by enhancing our balance-of-payments position.

The pharmaceutical industry will benefit substantially under this bill. The need for the legislation was succinctly outlined by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturing Association [PMA]:

The cause of the loss of patent life for pharmaceuticals is simply explained. When a firm discovers a promising new drug compound, it patents it immediately or risks losing the new technology to a competitor. Generally, a patent is issued within two or three years of patent filing, and the 17 years of protection begins immediately to expire. But the patent clock begins ticking long before a new product is ready for production and distribution. In fact, at the time its patent issues, a new drug compound is, on average, 7 to 10 years away from the marketplace—7 to 10 years that are needed to satisfy important statutory requirements for safety and efficacy administered by the Food and Drug Administration.

Although Congress never intended it, the time consumed in meeting these FDA requirements is, in effect, subtracted from the patent lives of drugs. The pharmaceutical innovator's new product typically enters the market with less than 10 of the 17 years of patent protection provided by statute and, therefore, with only a fraction of the related investment incentives provided innovators in other industries. This is neither fair nor good public policy.

Under the bill H.R. 3605, for every drug they test and have reviewed at the Food and Drug Administration [FDA], a generally corresponding patent term extension will be available. The availability of such a patent term extension has long been an important legislative goal for the industry. It is my hope that with enactment of this bill we will see a blossoming of new research and development activities. Once patent term restoration becomes law there will be an added incentive to pursue research for new drug products. I hope that in several years I will be able to return to this Chamber with the facts to substantiate the reality of this prediction.

CONSUMER INTEREST

According to the Food and Drug Administration this bill will save the American consumers upward of $1 billion. These savings will be achieved through the availability of generic substitutes.

As my colleagues know, the FDA currently has in place an approval process for pioneer drugs approved before 1962. Under this procedure nearly 3,000 generics have been approved. In this market, 80 percent of the generic market is controlled by research-based pharmaceuticals and only 20 percent by the production-intensive generic houses.

All this legislation does is to permit FDA to give approval of generics for the so-called post-1962 drugs. The net result of this change will be to open up several billion dollars of the $15.6 billion prescription drug market to competition. The winner in this competition will be the average American consumer.

Currently a substantial majority, nearly 80 percent according to the AFL-CIO of the prescriptions filled in the United States are paid by individuals without substantial assistance from the Government or insurers. As a result of this legislation, price competition will drive down the price of many prescription drugs, thus saving the consumer significant amounts. In addition, the Government as a health care provider—both through medicaid/medicare and more directly to Government employees and military personnel—will save millions through the increased availability of generic drug substitutes.

CONCLUSION

It is little wonder that this legislation has been endorsed by the American Association of Retired Persons [AARP] and the National Council of Senior Citizens [NCSC], because it is our senior citizens who bear the heaviest burden of high-cost medical care. I am also pleased to note that this bill has been enthusiastically endorsed by virtually all consumer groups and major labor organizations.

As a fervent and long-time supporter of patent term legislation, I am pleased to see that concept closer to enactment. I am equally pleased to see patent term legislation coupled with the long-needed reform of the FDA process of approving generic drugs. I urge my colleagues to support this measure.●

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the patent restoration bill, H.R. 3605, that was reported out of the Judiciary Committee last week. The rising cost of drugs is one of the most serious problems facing our Nation's elderly. This legislation will save consumers over $1 billion during the next 12 years.

Currently there are no procedures for approving generic copies of post-1962 drugs. This has greatly inhibited the development of generic equivalents for many of the most popular drugs on the market. In fact there are presently 150 unpatented drugs for which there are no generic equivalents due to the lack of FDA procedures.

Studies have shown that the cost of this inefficiency is tremendous. For example, when the generic brand of metronidazole was purchased by the Department of Defense, instead of its brand name equivalent, the Government was able to save approximately $1.2 million in 1 year. Similar savings can be expected for all who must purchase drugs for which there is currently no generic equivalent. Indeed, one study shows that the generic equivalents of 10 popular drugs are sold for an average of 50 percent less than the brand name product.

This bill will set up a procedure for quickly and efficiently approving the use of new generic drugs. In addition, it will permit a generic drug to be marketed immediately after the patent has expired.

The patent extension act represents a carefully crafted compromise intended to provide consumers with needed relief from the current bureaucratic tangle. It has the support of the majority of the pharmaceutical industry both brand name and generic, as well as consumer and aging organizations. Therefore, I urge the passage of this legislation without amendments.●

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. BRITT] having assumed the chair, Mr. DANIEL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3605) to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to authorize an abbreviated new drug application under section 505 of that act for generic new drugs equivalent to approved new drugs, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill, H.R. 3605, just under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5640, SUPERFUND EXPANSION AND PROTECTION ACT OF 1984

Mr. PEPPER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 98-975) on the resolution (H. Res. 570) providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5640) to amend the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

WAR POWERS ACT OF 1984

(Mr. EDWARDS of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, 61 Members of the House of Representatives introduced H.R. 6078, the War Powers Act of 1984, designed to codify the Constitution's requirement that only Congress can decide when the Nation can go to war.

H.R. 6078, a companion bill to S. 1906, introduced in the other body by Senators STENNIS, EAGLETON, and CRANSTON, will preclude the President from introducing U.S. troops into hostilities or areas of imminent hostilities without congressional consent—except under specific circumstances, such as to rescue U.S. citizens or to respond to an armed attack.

Our founders made it clear in article I, section 8, of the Constitution that Congress must make the decision if and when the country goes to war. This is what the founders intended, and this interpretation was supported by the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention and the Federalist Papers.

The writers of our Constitution feared more than anything else that the Commander in Chief would abuse his power and create a monarchical tyranny, the kind from which they had fled in Europe. As Thomas Jefferson noted in a letter to James Madison, "We have already given in example one effectual check on the Dog of War by transferring the power of letting him loose from the executive to the legislative body * * *."

For more than 100 years, Presidents quite generally understood and respected Congress' exclusive jurisdiction as provided in article I. The earliest U.S. Supreme Court, too, recognized Congress' sole warmaking power. Ruled Chief Justice John Marshall in Talbot against Seeman, "The whole powers of war being by the Constitution of the United States vested in Congress, the acts of that body alone be resorted to as our guide * * *."

The War of 1812 with Great Britain was not begun until Congress had declared war by majority votes. President James Madison asked Congress for this permission explaining that warmaking was a "solemn question which the Constitution wisely confides to the legislative department of the government."

President Monroe respected the supremacy of Congress when issuing the Monroe Doctrine in 1824. While enunciating the U.S. protective role in Latin America, Monroe did not claim that a President alone could decide to send U.S. troops to defend Latin American countries. He said "the Executive has no right to compromise the nation in any question of war."

The decades passed, and each 19th century President paid scrupulous respect to article I's requirement that the Federal legislature, after public debate, decides when the Nation should make war. President Jefferson insisted on congressional permission to attack the Barbary pirates. In 1822 military strikes against pirates in the Caribbean were not carried out until Congress voted approval. Presidents Andrew Johnson, Grant, Arthur, and Harrison emphasized that rule of congressional supremacy.

Some say that President Lincoln committed troops to the Civil War without congressional approval, taking upon himself the warmaking powers. But this example does not hold up. Yes, Lincoln ordered strong countermeasures after the attack on Fort Sumter and ordered a blockage of Southern ports. But he viewed his actions as strictly defensive, and he said that no President could "make war at his pleasure."

Indeed, as a Congressman speaking against the unauthorized use of American troops by President Polk, Abraham Lincoln was very specific in warning of the dangers inherent in Presidential usurpation of the congressional warmaking power.

Allow a President to invade a neighboring Nation, whenever he shall deem it necessary to repel an invasion, and you allow him to do so, whenever he may choose to say he deems it necessary for such purpose—and you allow him to make war at pleasure.

It was not until the 20th century that "making war at pleasure" became a consistent, rather than an occasional, practice. Time and again during this century, Presidents sent American troops into foreign hostilities without prior authorization from the Congress. Our forces were sent into armed conflicts around the globe—into Central America and South America, into the Caribbean, into the Far East and the Middle East, and most notably into Southeast Asia—all in the name of the national interest, all at the individual initiative of the President, and all with only ex post facto approval by the governmental body holding the exclusive power to make such commitments.

Twenty years ago, on August 7, 1964, Congress enacted the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution, which gave President Johnson virtually limitless power to go to war in Southeast Asia. As pointed out by Senator Javits:

> We live in an age of undeclared war, which has meant Presidential war. Prolonged engagement in undeclared, Presidential wars has created a most dangerous imbalance in our Constitutional system of checks and balances.

In 1973 Congress attempted to recapture its constitutional authority over the making of war by the passage of the War Powers Resolution. The earliest Senate version, authored by Senators STENNIS and EAGLETON, accurately codified the warmaking provisions of the Constitution's article I, section 8—it required congressional authorization for making war.

Unfortunately, the final version of the War Power Resolution turned the Constitution on its head. In effect, it licenses the President to decide to go to war, with the weak restriction that the U.S. troops must be withdrawn within 60 days unless Congress specifically authorizes a longer term of activity.

This is the major defect of the present War Powers Resolution. Congress does not participate in the warmaking decision until after the President has gone to war.

It creates a legal base for unconstitutional Presidential wars. It is a blank check. It flies in the face of what we should have learned 20 years ago today—which is that the choice between war and peace is best decided by the collective judgment of the President and the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6078, the War Powers Act of 1984, will codify in a responsible manner the all-important warmaking provisions of the U.S. Constitution. The many cosponsors and I urge that the appropriate committees move promptly to approve it.

IN SUPPORT OF THE OLDER AMERICANS ACT

(Mr. CHANDLER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker. my purpose in addressing the House today is to indicate my strong support for H.R. 4785—the Older Americans Act. In doing so, I wish to join so many of my colleagues in paying tribute to the late chairman of the Education and Labor Committee who did so much for the elderly in this country. We will all miss the gentleman from Kentucky. Mr. Perkins was a friend.

The Older Americans Act becomes more important each year as the population of the United States becomes a more elderly one. While private pension and health plans, combined with Social Security, have created an effective source of income for the elderly, we still find many Americans who need assistance in their later years. The Older Americans Act provides that help.

For many of the elderly, loneliness and boredom comprise the greater part of the day. Now, companionship and activities are provided through senior centers funded by the Older Americans Act.

In older Americans, we have a great resource of talent and energy. And, these people need a release for their abilities. Under the community job service program, opportunities for part-time work are provided. I am happy to say that my 78-year-old mother who lives in La Grande, OR, is employed under this excellent program. Mr. Speaker, you should know that the small amount of money she earns makes a few extras possible for her. But far more importantly, the job she holds gives her a reason to get up in the morning. It brings her into contact with people. And frankly, it even gives her something to occasionally complain about—and we all need that.

H.R. 4785 also provides nutritious hot meals to many of our senior citizens who benefit, not only from the quality food, but also from the companionship of these meal times.

I am also very pleased, Mr. Speaker that this bill targets Alzheimer's disease for special attention. This incredibly debilitating and little understood illness raises a frightening specter for the elderly. Now that some progress is being made in the solution to this complex medical puzzle, we must concentrate our resources to eradicate this dread disease.

It has been a pleasure for me to work in behalf of this legislation as a member of the Education and Labor Committee and as a member of the Subcommittee on Human Resources. I wish to compliment subcommittee chairman, IKE ANDREWS of North Carolina. He has sought the views of all members of the committee and brought to the floor today a bill which deserves bipartisan support. I wish to also commend ranking minority member, THOMAS PETRI of Wisconsin. Mr. PETRI made numerous contributions to this legislation.

Finally, may I urge, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues to support H.R. 4785, a vital piece of legislation for the seniors of America.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR RIGHTS FOR WORKING PEOPLE EVERYWHERE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have had the privilege of organizing this hour long special order on the subject of international labor rights for working people everywhere. I am most pleased that some 23 of my colleagues have recognized the importance of this subject and have submitted statements to me which will be put into the RECORD or which they will deliver themselves.

Let me begin this proceeding by asking a question: Who said the following:

Working men and women aspire "to more humane conditions, to greater security, to a fairer participation in the fruits of their common labor regarding wages, social security, and opportunities for cultural and spiritual growth. They want to be treated as free and responsible men and women, able to participate in the decisions which affect their life and their future. It is a fundamental right of workers to freely establish organizations to defend and promote their interests and to contribute in a responsible manner to the common good."

Was it Karl Marx? Che Guevera? John L. Lewis, maybe? Or Eugene Debs?

The answer is none of the men whose names I mentioned. These are the words of Pope John Paul II taken from his encyclical, Laborem Exercens—On Human Work. The Pope's teaching affirms the importance of free and autonomous labor unions for all workers in every country. In fact, according to the Pope, the experience of history teaches that unions are "an indispensable element of social life."

More recently, the Kissinger Commission on Central America clearly has stated that "assuring an equitable distriubtion of economic benefits will require both job-oriented development strategies and trade unions to protect workers' rights."

In the next hour, I will be joined by several of my colleagues to drive home a central point. In the 1980's and beyond, it is not enough to passively acknowledge that unions are legitimate or even that they are necessary to a civil society. Labor rights and unions are essential to the promotion of social justice and to the safeguarding of human freedom in any society.

To date, the focus of our human rights laws as they relate to the conduct of American foreign policy has been almost exclusively on the sanctity of the individual and politicial rights. We can all agree that as long as torture, political prisoners, death squad, terrorism, and totalitarianism are widespread in this world, the White House and the Congress must not shirk from the refinement and vigrous enforcement of these laws. It is our moral and legal duty.

But, in principle, we embraced labor rights as well as political rights for all the people of this world when the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was adopted in 1948 as a resolution by the General Assembly of the newly created United Nations. The declaration specifically affirms for every person the right to a job, the right to form and join trade unions, and the right to an adequate standard of living. I am sorry to say that as I stand before you in 1984—36 years later—we have yet to develop effective tools to make certain that the conduct of official U.S. foreign policy or that the conduct of American-based multinational corporations really respect and promote international labor rights. Too often our greed and thirst for profits have led us to exploit the surplus of hands around the world ready to work for selfish ends.

The time has come for the leaders of our country to fight just as hard for the right to join a union as the right to vote.

The time has come to stand up for the right to bargain collectively just as we stand up for the right to free speech.

The time has come to defend the right to strike just as we defend freedom of the press.

And yes, the time has come for those who are most outspoken about traditionally family values to join the rest of us in showing the same measure of moral indignation and concern for children being sold into slavery or forced into factory work without ever having seen the inside of a classroom.

We simply cannot expect people to vote for democracy in the midst of the economic misery that is so prevalent around the world. Labor rights are a prerequisite to a just society and a bona fide democracy.

Now I want to speak to the importance of international labor rights for fostering broad-based economic development in lesser-developed countries [LDC's].

For decades, the U.S. foreign aid program has sought with mixed results to further economic development and growth in Third World countries. we have witnessed some countries making real progress toward development through industrialization, only to find more of their people trapped in hunger and poverty. Hopefully, we have learned that for development to be effective, it must benefit the broadest sectors of the population within recipient countries.

Why are labor rights crucial to the development process? Quite simply, extending labor rights to workers in LDC's equips them to help themselves. The capacity to form unions and to bargain collectively to achieve higher wages and safer, healthier working conditions is essential to the overall struggle of working people everywhere to achieve minimally decent living standards and to overcome hunger and poverty. The denial of labor rights in Third World countries tends to perpetuate poverty, to limit the benefits of economic development and growth to narrow, privileged elites, and to sow the seeds of social instability and political rebellion.

Antilabor policies may, in the short run, profit companies that use cheap labor to produce low-priced goods for export to the United States. Echoing the voices of those who opposed the enactment of minimum wage laws in the United States, some corporate apologists now argue that many workers in developing countries are far better off working for $1 a day than they would be not working at all. But this sort of blatant exploitation of cheap labor undermines the development of self-reliant local economies in much of the Third World. By restricting workers' income and buying power, the governments of many developing countries are severely limiting the growth of internal consumer markets that are capable of sustaining more consistent demands for goods and fueling more self-reliant economies. It is just as true overseas as it is here at home that putting spending money in the pockets of working people creates increased demand for more goods and services which creates jobs. To ignore labor rights violations is to ignore the role of increased wages and better working conditions in achieving and sustaining long-term development and economic vitality among Third World countries.

In fiscal year 1984, approximately $2 billion will be appropriated to U.S. development assistance programs. This will be the latest installment payment to be made by our Government in the name of the American people with the sincere hope that it will contribute to a better way of life for people in many poor developing countries who are far less fortunate than we are.

Consider this. In 1982, the latest year for which complete data is available, $221 billion was invested abroad, while overseas lending by U.S. commercial banks soared to $402 billion. How many more people would benefit and how much more broad-based development would be possible if a fraction of the American dollars loaned and invested overseas each year were directed to countries that treat their workers with dignity rather than contempt?

Finally, let me say a few words about the importance of international labor rights to American workers. It is easy in this complex world to lose sight of the fact that the struggle of workers in countries like Poland, South Africa, the Philippines, and El Salvador is vitally important to the future of labor everywhere, including the United States. The lack of basic rights for workers in many developing countries and elsewhere is a powerful inducement for capital flight and overseas production by U.S. industries. The tremendous disparity in labor rights between many American workers and the absence of those rights for most workers in other countries is a growing factor in the competitive decline of many of our basic industries like steel, shipbuilding, and auto production as well as in less-skill intensive industries like footwear, rubber goods, textiles, and electronics.

The threat, whether explicit or implicit, by American-based multinational corporations to transfer domestic production and jobs from the United States to other countries in which there are no labor rights every day becomes a more common ploy to force American workers to relinquish legitimate rights and material benefits won through more than 200 years of personal hardship and struggle. Similarly, the same threats are effectively used by American-based multinational corporations to undercut the rights of workers in developing countries. These global corporations, accountable to nobody, often threaten to leave some Third World countries and to move elsewhere to avoid being bound by labor rights in order to pressure workers to accept substandard working conditions and very low wages.

In the 1980's and beyond, capital and technology will continue to be moved around the world without regard to national boundaries, while workers remain stationary and bound by national laws and personal allegiance. These economic facts of life fuel an escalating trend in global production that undercuts the rights of all workers. In particular, they combine to diminish the rights of American workers to the lowest common international denominator. To make matters worse, American workers are paying for military aid, in the name of national security, to undemocratic governments that are willing to grind their impoverished workers in order to take American jobs. In the Philippines and in Central America, for example, U.S. foreign aid helps sustain repressive regimes that kill or imprison labor leaders and that suppress wages to attract foreign investment.

Numerous American industries and unions understandably and properly continue to protest unfair trade subsidies and the "dumping" of low-priced foreign goods into the American market. The same outcry should be heard in protest of "social dumping"—unfair competition from foreign workers whose low wage scales result from them being denied the free exercise of basic labor rights.

The rights of American workers will be more secure and U.S. industrial health will be more effectively advanced by a positive, aggressive, coordinated strategy to extend labor rights to workers in all of the countries with which we must compete in the global marketplace. Quite honestly, no worker is free until all workers are free.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEASE. I will be happy to yield to my colleague from Texas.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR RIGHTS

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my colleague from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] for taking this special order. He is sensitive to the importance of preserving the rights of working people to have a say in their own working conditions; the rights of people to help define what they can properly be asked to do, and what is beyond the realm of reason to ask or demand.

In the industrial age there have been two profound developments. One has been the intense application of captal to technology, so that human labor has been made more and more productive, so that the output of goods and services has multiplied hundreds, even thousands of times. The other has been the development of labor as an organized entity. From this latter development, we have seen the shortening of the workweek; we have seen the insistent demand for working conditions that are safe, and we have seen the gradual and grudging acceptance of the fact that if labor is treated as a partner instead of as a mere chattel, the economy is made stronger, society more decent, and all of us better off.

Today the world economy is more and more tightly integrated. It is assumed that the production of goods will become less important in an economy like ours—that production will shift to areas where costs are lower, labor more docile, and working people's rights are few and far between. But that is a false assumption. As production grows, so does the interest of labor in making that production exist under tolerable conditions, at decent pay, and with recognition that labor has rights.

I noted a few days ago a story in which a large U.S. auto manufacturer is having problems keeping its labor force in a Mexican plant intact. Labor is certainly plentiful in Mexico, and joblessness is rampant. But the company has huge turnover, its training costs are high, and its absentee rate intolerable. And why? It turns out that wages are miserable, that conditions are bad, and that employees soon grow disillusioned. I suggest to you that if those same employees had some effective, reasonable word in the way they work, some influence over their wages and hours and conditions, that plant would be more productive and more profitable. But of course the company does not wish to see it that way.

Experience and studies have shown that companies that treat labor with compassion and decency have better productivity, lower turnover, less absenteeism and better labor relations. But there are few times when those better conditions evolve without some kind of influence from workers who have an organized way of presenting their views to management. That is what labor rights is all about.

I do not know of any labor organizer of official who want to manage a company. All that's wanted is the right to share in corporate decisions that directly affect the working people. It is the same here, and it is the same around the world. Working people want the right to withhold their labor, if need be. They want the right and the ability to organize and bargain collectively, because such is the only way that their needs can be addressed in any coherent way. They want the right to work together, to have their concerns addressed, their views heard.

In our own country we owe much to organized labor. A workweek that is 40 hours long, not 60, is the heritage of organized labor. Wages and benefits that provide a decent and secure living are the direct result of long and bitter efforts to bargain over wages and benefits. Cleaner air, cleaner water, a safer workplace—these are the heritage of a labor movement that works for the human side of the production line.

Internationally, if labor in the countries with which we trade, had the same rights as labor here at home, our own jobs would be safer, the world would be a more decent place, and we would have less of a threat of trade wars—which after all are wars that ultimately exploit one working populace against another. We cannot cheapen labor rights here at home or cheapen the value of those rights abroad, without debasing our own standard of living, without sacrificing our own good.

We have labor rights in this country; we take those rights more or less for granted. But if any one of us traveled to a less fortunate country, we would soon see what the value of organized labor is, and how priceless are the rights of the working man. Those are rights that we ought to value more at home—and rights that we should promote abroad. We should do so because it is right, and because it is decent, and ultimately because we ourselves would be better off for it.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman from Texas for his contribution.

Certainly we all know from his statements regularly on this House floor of his commitment to the benefit of working people everywhere.

Mr. Speaker, I would like now to turn to some examples of generic labor rights problems, the kinds of problems that occur around the world.

One of these areas is in that of export processing zones. A lot of countries are setting up so-called free trade zones. There are some 100 of them now where a good deal of third world manufacturing exports are assembled.

In order to attract industrial investment, approximately 40 of the 130-odd developing countries have set up free trade zones offering special incentives to foreign firms, including exemptions from customs duties, imports quotas, foreign exchange controls, and local taxes as well as the advantages of unlimited profit repatriation, long tax holidays, preferential treatment, and subsidized utilities.

LABOR STANDARDS IN EXPORT PROCESSING ZONES

Of relevance for the issue at hand today, most free trade zones also offer antistrike laws and other exemptions from fair labor standards.

Before reviewing labor conditions in these zones, it is useful to give a brief overview of where the zones are and how countries attract United States and foreign firms to set up plants in the zones. Free trade zones have spread as large corporations have increasingly taken advantage of cheap wages in the Third World by fragmenting the production process for autos, textiles, and other products into a number of partial operations located in factories around the globe.

Over half of the existing zones are in Asia, concentrated in the Philippines, Malaysia, South Korea, Sri Lanka, Taiwan, Pakistan, Thailand, India, and China, with expansion plans in the works in Bangladesh and Indonesia. The Caribbean Basin is the next greatest area of concentration, with numerous zones in Mexico and Puerto Rico, followed by Barbados, Belize, Dominica, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, and Jamaica. Africa is behind in developing zones, although a substantial buildup already exists in Egypt, Mauritius, Senegal, and Tunisia.

A glimpse of labor conditions is seen in the brochures which certain developing countries offer to prospective investors:

From Malaysia:

The manual dexterity of the oriental female is famous the world over. Her hands are small and she works fast with extreme care. Who, therefore, could be better qualified by nature and inheritance to contribute to the efficiency of a bench-assembly production line than the oriental girl . . . Labor rates in Malaysia are among the lowest in the region and female factory workers can be hired for approximately United States $1.50 a day.

From Thailand:

One of the major factors that recommends Thailand to the investor over other countries in the region is an abundant supply of cheap and trainable labor.

From Colombia:

Low cost labor: This is without doubt the chief incentive offered by the ZFIC as the salaries are more or less the same as those that prevail in the industrial zones in the Far East (U.S. $2.10 per day including social security) . . . Male and female workers are easily obtained due to the high rate of unemployment, rapid increases of population and the emigration from the rural zones to the cities.

Labor standards, and the lack thereof, can be gauged by the following breakdown: What kinds of jobs, labor legislation, job security, health conditions, and working hours.

I. WHAT KINDS OF JOBS?

Specializing in assembly line work in garments, electronics, toys and cars, free trade zone typically have an extremely unbalanced structure of employment. The jobs created in the zones tend to be unskilled or semiskilled in repetitive monotonous work. Firms in the zones predominantly draw their workers from a particular, low-cost segment of the labor force: young women who are mostly new entrants to the labor force. An ILO survey revealed that, of the total work force in free trade zones, women made up more than 90 percent in Sri Lanka, more than 80 percent in Malaysia, and more than 70 percent in the Philippines and Mauritania. This pattern is repeated in Mexico, where almost 90 percent of the workers in the border zone are women.

II. LABOR LEGISLATION

There is evidence that transnational corporations have put pressure on governments for no union guarantees as a prerequisite for investment and that prevailing law and practice within many zones is contrary to basic ILO standards and the ILO tripartite declaration on multinational enterprises and social policy. Special labor legislation for the zones exists in some countries, and in others elaborate systems of control over unions have been set up to prevent strikes and shield companies from the usual procedures of industrial relations.

A recent ILO appraisal of labor conditions in Asian zones found that: "The rights of unions to organize, elect leaders of their choice and to bargain collectively had been significantly reduced since the late 1960's, and in particular within the [zones]." For example:

In South Korea, a provisional special law concerning regulation of labor unions and labor disputes at foreign capital firms was introduced in 1970 prohibiting all labor disputes in the zones.

In Taiwan, unions are mandatory but practically powerless. They are prohibited from crossing company lines and hence there are 161 separate unions in the three free trade zones, and none have a say in setting wages and/or the right to strike.

In Malaysia, legislation on industrial relations passed in 1955 and 1967—and amended in 1971—guarantees production without disruption by prohibiting strikes and allowing that employees can be summarily dismissed.

III. JOB SECURITY

Job security is tenuous at best in the zones, given that their main attraction to firms is the ability to hire and fire workers at will. During the 1974–75 economic recession, for example, half of the 40,000 workers in Mexico's border regions were laid off and 17,000 workers in Singapore, lost their jobs.

IV. HEALTH CONDITIONS

Health and safety conditions in many factories are simply abominable. This is particularly the case in electronics factories, where half the Asian free trade zone work force is located and about 60 percent of Mexican border labor. In 1978, U.S. electronics firms operated 15 assembly plants in Malaysia, 14 in Hong Kong, 12 in Singapore, and over 24 elsewhere in Asia. In these electronics factories, workers are continually exposed to carcinogenic substances such as acids, solvents, and gases. Workers frequently complain of acid burns, skin rashes, nausea, dizziness, lung trouble, swollen eyes, urinary tract, and other problems.

V. WORKING HOURS

In most countries, zone factories have a standard working week of 48 hours. In many zones, talking is not allowed and there are competitions between assembly lines and between subsidiaries of the same company to speed up production. Most factories work at least 50 weeks per year with little or no annual leave. There is also a considerable amount of overtime work in the zones, with 55 to 60 hours the norm in South Korea. In Sri Lanka, despite the Government's signing the ILO convention which prohibits the employment of female workers between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m., electronics firms have begun operating night shifts. For these long hours, workers in Asian zones are typically paid between a tenth and an eighth of their counterparts in the West.

Mr. Speaker, I think more needs to be said about the exploitation of women for cheap labor in the Third World. In the last 15 years, multinational corporations, such as Sears Roebuck and General Electric, have come to rely on women around the world to keep labor costs down and profits up. Women are the unseen assemblers of consumer goods such as toys, the hardware of today's microprocessor revolution, and designer jeans.

Low wages are the main reason companies move to the Third World. A female assembly line worker in the United States is likely to earn between $3.35 and $5 an hour. In many Third World countries a woman doing the same work will earn $3 to $5 a day.

U.S. corporations call their international production facilities offshore sourcing. To unions these are runaway shops that take jobs away from American workers. Economists, meanwhile, talk about a new international division of labor, in which low-skilled labor-intensive jobs are shifted to Third World countries. Control over management and technology, however, remains at company headquarters in developed countries like the United States and Japan.

The electronics industry provides a good example of the new international division of labor: Circuits are printed on silicon wafers and tested in California; then the wafers are shipped to Asia for the labor-intensive process in which they are cut into tiny chips and bonded to circuit boards; final assembly into products such as calculators, video games, or military equipment usually takes place in the United States. Yet many American consumers don't realize that the goods they buy may have made a global journey—or that the foreign products that worry U.S. workers may have been made in factories owned, at least in part, by U.S. corporations.

Since the 1960's, multinationals have scattered factories across the globe as export-oriented industrialization—touted by the United Nations Development Organization [UNIDO], the World Bank, and the International Monetary Fund—has become the favored strategy for Third World development. Third World countries roll out the red carpet for foreign investors and become export platforms producing goods for the world market. In return, host governments are promised jobs, technology, and foreign exchange.

Free-trade zones, or export processing zones as they are also known, have emerged as key elements in this export-led development. The free-trade zone is a haven for foreign investment, complete with electricity and other infrastructure, and a labor force often housed in nearby dormitories.

Free-trade zones—there are now over 100—mean more freedom for business and less freedom for people. Inside, behind walls often topped with barbed wire, the zones resemble a huge labor camp where trade unions, strikes, and freedom of movement are severely limited, if not forbidden. A special police force is on hand to search people and vehicles entering and leaving the zones.

There are over 1 million people employed in industrial free-trade zones in the Third World. Millions more work outside the zones in multinational-controlled plants and domestically owned subcontracting factories.

Using the subcontracting strategy, manufacturers based in developed countries send the most labor-intensive stages of production—for example, sewing or assembly—to the Third World nations where labor is cheap. Once assembled, the multinational reimports the goods—under generous tariff exemptions—to the developed countries instead of selling them to the local market. The subcontractor may be the multinational's own subsidiary, as is the case with nearly all women assembling electronics for foreign companies in free-trade zones. Or, the subcontractor can be an independent firm or an agent who further subcontracts the assembly work to women who work in their own homes.

While global recession has markedly slowed trade and investments worldwide since 1979, international subcontracting has boomed. By 1981, subcontracting challenged foreign direct investment as the major form of corporate overseas expansion in the developing world.

International subcontracting has enhanced corporate power and flexibility at the expense of workers and government in several ways. Since subcontracting arrangements through national firms or home workshops involve no new capital investment, it is easy for a multinational to break a contract in the face of political upheaval and reestablish a similar one in another country. In addition, the multinational can avoid the risk that its investment will be nationalized under unfavorable terms.

Likewise, in the uncertain atmosphere of the current economic crisis, multinationals can more easily slash production orders without letting their own factories lay idle. Finally, since the multinational is often the sole buyer from the subcontractor, it is able to dictate price and conditions in the contract from a position of monopoly power.

Since multinationals go overseas to reduce labor costs, women are the natural choice for assembly jobs. Wage earning opportunities for women are considered only supplementary income earners for their families. Management uses that secondary status to pay women less than men and justify layoffs during slow periods, claiming that women don't need to work and will probably quit to get married anyway.

Women are the preferred work force for other reasons. Multinationals want a work force that is docile, easily manipulated, and willing to do boring, repetitive assembly work. Women, they claim, are the perfect employees, with their natural patience and manual dexterity. As the personnel manager of an assembly plant in Taiwan says, "Young male workers are too restless and impatient to be doing monotonous work with no career value. If displeased, they sabotage the machines and even threaten the foreman. But girls, at most they cry a little."

Multinationals prefer single women with no children and no plans to have any. Pregnancy tests are routinely given to potential employees to avoid the issue of maternity benefits. In the Philippines' bataan export processing zone, the Mattel Toy Co., offers prizes to workers who undergo sterilization.

The majority of the new female work force is young, between 16 and 25 years old. As one management consultant explains, "When seniority rises, wages rise"; so the companies prefer to train a fresh group of teenagers rather than give experienced women higher pay. The youngest workers, usually under 23 years old, are found in electronics and textile factories where keen eyesight and dexterity are essential. A second, older group of women work in industries like food processing where nimble fingers and perfect vision are not required. Multinationals can get away with worse conditions in these factories because the women generally can't find jobs elsewhere.

Corporate apologists are quick to insist that Third World women are absolutely thrilled with their new-found employment opportunities. A top-level management consultant who advises U.S. companies on where to relocate their factories said, "The girls genuinely enjoy themselves. They're away from their families. They have spending money. They can buy motor bikes, whatever. Of course it is a regulated experience, too—with dormitories to live in—so it's a healthful experience."

By earning money and working outside the home, factory women may find a certain independence from their families. Meeting and working with other women lays the foundation for a collective spirit, and perhaps, collective action.

But at the same time, the factory system relies upon and reinforces the power of men in the traditional patriarchal family to control women. Cynthia Enloe, a sociologist who organized an international conference of women textile workers in 1982, says that in the Third World, the emphasis on family is absolutely crucial to management strategy. Even recruitment is a family process. Women don't just go out independently to find jobs: It's a matter of fathers, brothers, and husbands making women available after getting reassurances from the companies. Discipline becomes a family matter since, in most cases, women turn their paychecks to their parents. Factory life is, in general, constrained and defined by the family life cycle.

Such docility is often ensured by government repression. Under martial law in the Philippines, the new labor code banned strikes in vital industries, which, by definition, included all industries located in the export processing zones. State violence was used to quell workers' protests in Guatemala in 1975, in the Dominican Republic in 1978 and in South Korea in 1972, 1978, and 1982. Frequently government-controlled trade unions have broken up rank-and-file organizing drives.

Half a million East Asian women are estimated to be working in export processing zones. Women are heavily employed in export manufacture outside the zones as well. In South Korea for example, women comprise one-third of the industrial force.

A percentage of these oriental girls come from rural areas, drawn to the burgeoning urban centers by reports from friends or older sisters who've landed an assembly job. Companies often recruit in the countryside as well, frequently enlisting the help of village authorities and the fathers and brothers of factory age women. In Taiwan, large companies work with junior high school principals who offer up busloads of recent graduates to labor-hungry plants. For the majority of women, it is their first job experience. They may even be the first wage-earners in their families.

While some women live close enough to factories to remain with their families and commute by bus, most workers are forced to find accommodations near the plant. Housing is scarce and expensive for their meager wages. Access to clean water is often nonexistent or severely limited. Company dormitory rooms are small and crowded, with beds shared by as many as three shifts of workers: as one worker gets up to go to the factory, another returning from work takes her place in bed. As many as 20 women may be crammed into a tiny space.

The great majority of the women earn subsistence level incomes, whether they work for a multinational corporation or a locally owned factory. While corporate executives insist that their wages are ample in view of lower standards of living, the minimum wage in most East Asian countries comes nowhere near to covering basic living costs. In the Philippines, starting wages in U.S.-owned electronic plants are between $34 and $46 a month; the basic cost of living is $37 a month for one person. In Indonesia, the starting wages are about $7 less per month then the basic cost of living. And that basic cost of living means bare subsistence: A diet of rice, some dried fish and water, lodging in a small room occupied by four or more people.

Subsistence wages are only a part of the picture. Most women work under conditions that can break their health or shatter their nerves within a few years, often before they've worked long enough to earn more than a subsistence wage.

Women factory workers are in a precarious situation, treated like temporary workers, always under the threat of layoffs. Sick leave, holidays, and vacations are almost unheard of. A probationary or apprenticeship period of 6 months or so, during which pay is only three-quarters of the regular wage, is common. By laying off workers just before the end of their probation, companies save the expense of a full wage. Workers are so used to this practice that they refer to themselves as permanent casuals.

Stress and high anxieity permeat the women's work lives, contributing to health problems. Most factories operate several shifts, requiring workers to rotate day and night shifts every week or so. These irregular schedules wreak havoc with sleep patterns and foster nervous ailments and stomach disorders. When production deadlines draw near or there are rush orders, women may be forced to work overtime for as much as 48 hours at a stretch without sleep. Management often provides pep pills and amphetamine injections to keep the women awake and working; some of the women have become addicts.

Sexual harassment is another hazard of factory work, especially for women who are out late at night working the graveyard shift. In the Bataan export processing zone in the Philippines, sexual harassment is a common practice among male supervisors. "We call our company 'motel'," says a worker at Mattel, "because we are often told to lay down or be laid off. It is hard to know what to do when that happens because we can't afford to lose our jobs."

Multinationals pit women against each other, not only as workers, but also as sex objects, superimposing Western notions of femininity and consumerism upon local cultural stereotypes. Beauty contests are an integral part of factory life, with each company sending its own beauty queen to the yearly, "Miss Free Trade Zone" contest. Bathing suit and "Guess-whose-legs-these-are" contests are also popular. On pay day, vendors are often let into factories to sell cosmetics—promoted in company-sponsored cosmetics classes—jewelry, and other luxury items.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn now to a subject which we all should be interested in and that is the exploitation of children.

The abuse and misuse of child labor constitutes perhaps one of the most shocking and distasteful violations of international labor rights. Worldwide, over 55 million children under the age of 15 currently work for a living, most in underdeveloped regions. In some Asian countries as much as 7 percent of the population under 15 years work, and at times compose up to 11 percent of the overall labor force. In certain African nations, 20 percent of children under 15 are part of their mainstream labor force.

The forms of child labor vary. A vast majority are unpaid family workers, especially in the agricultural sector. Some families, out of economic necessity, hand over or sell their children to employers, leaving the youth totally dependent and vulnerable to ill treatment. Other children labor as unpaid apprentices and some are forced to be independent and work in order to survive.

During the 1980's, the nature of child labor has undergone qualitative changes. Traditionally, children in the rural sector worked in peripheral farming roles. Today, because of increased urban migration and rising numbers of female-headed households, children are performing more difficult tasks. They now play central roles in sustaining the meager level of living found in many primitive agricultural settings.

This rapid rural-urban migration has created an increase in industrial production, and a concomitant increase in child industrial employment. The conditions of industrial work may be the most exploitive of child labor, subjecting children to long hours, extremely low wages, and physically hazardous working environments. Clear and written contracts, proper feeding programs, and established holidays or rest times are virtually nonexistent. The gruesome details of this child labor exploitation present a horrifying picture.

In Thailand, professionally operated markets buy and sell thousands of children each year, supply cheap labor to factories, massage parlors, and brothels. Most are young girls, aged 10 to 14, who sell for anywhere between $20 and $100. Some of these girls will go on to work from 6 a.m. to 9 p.m. in unregistered factories with no ventilation and oppressive heat. During the day they will breathe lint-filled air, suffer deafening factory noise, and at night will be locked in the factory storeroom.

In India, over 20,000 children labor in match factories for 16 hours each day, beginning at 3 a.m. Pakistani building and quarrying industries effectively abduct children from their homes and confine them in camps where they are closely guarded and severely punished if they attempt escape. Some Thai children work in battery factories filling batteries with carbon. Because they wear no masks or protective clothing, many will suffer lung ailments or even paralysis from the delibitating effects of the manganese.

These industrial atrocities aside, perhaps agriculture is most harmful to its large number of child laborers. Working with dangerous machinery and pesticides and suffering prolonged exposure to heat, dust, wind, and disease-carrying insects can seriously impair children's development. Most frighteningly, child labor exerts little or no influence over any of these hazardous working conditions.

Why do children continue to work under these abominable conditions? First, extensive poverty often necessitates full- or part-time employment of children. Incomes from child labor can contribute substantially to family income. When a child earn 20 to 25 percent of a family income, and that family lives on the edge of starvation, child labor becomes an economic imperative.

The lack of resources presently allotted for enforcement of child labor regulations is a second reason for the prevalence of child labor. Labor inspection facilities are often understaffed, underfunded, and very susceptible to bribery and corruption.

Also much of the flagrant violation of existing law occurs in the informal urban sector, which is out of the orbit of legislation and labor inspection services.

Third, the general public in these countries remains ignorant of the implications of poor working and living conditions for child development. Because of their squalid, poverty-stricken environment, the appalling factory conditions and harsh treatment of children seems natural and necessary.

Finally, many developing countries take child labor for granted. For many countries child employment has been a socially and culturally ligitimate norm. Considering economic circumstances, unpaid work in the form of household or farm duties has been not only an acceptable tradition, but a commendable and honorable one.

As Americans, our view of child labor has been colored by media reports of exploitation and a Western idea of childhood as a time for carefree growth and play. A distinction between child exploitation and child employment must be made. Not all working children are unhappy or exploited. A useful and productive occupation can be a desirable element in daily life, even for children. It can teach much that parents and schools cannot, and may offer a useful alternative to boredom or idleness.

The modern organized labor movement views this illegal and uncontrolled use of child labor as a threat to fair labor standards already achieved for adult workers. Besides undermining hard-won labor accomplishments, child labor prevent continuing educational training. No modern economy will be able to achieve full growth without an adequate system of education to train their youth, a most valuable national asset.

Simply passing regulations or minimum age requirements will not touch the root of the child labor problem. Economic hardship and differing social perceptions lay at the heart of the issue. Policies dealing with employment and poverty alleviation may help more than legislation concerning any specifics of child labor. A broad-based rural development program or a supervised cleanup of the informal urban sector would provide some hope for future long-term improvement. Educational expansion and labor-intensive public work schemes seem more workable than an out and out ban on child labor.

Actions to improve children's working conditions must be the immediate first step. Welfare facilities and services, minimum levels of education, and health protection should be available to all working children. Effective enforcement of existing provisions would greatly improve all aspects of the child labor situation. Finally, countries should review existing standards particularly those concerning hazardous activities, number of hours worked, and weekly rest and holidays.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I insert into the RECORD a statement on the labors rights violations of agricultural workers.

LABOR RIGHTS VIOLATIONS OF AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

Perhaps no group of workers have suffered as much violation of their rights as workers as have agricultural workers. Many are not covered by national labor legislation or minimum labor standards such as minimum wage provisions or laws seeking to eliminate child labor. Our country is open to criticism for having specifically excluded U.S. agricultural workers from coverage by the Wagner Act of 1932 which secured collective bargaining rights for other workers.

The rural isolation and lack of numerical concentration of many farm workers have presented particular obstacles to agricultural workers' organizing to better their conditions. Such isolation has often perpetuated feudal or serf relations, in which rural workers' labor is available almost unconditionally to large landowners and may generate non-wage compensation such as sharecropping or limited subsistence tenancy.

The issue is complicated by the fact that in many lesser developed countries, such as in Africa, little economic surplus is generated in the agricultural sector. This makes it difficult for workers to advance their conditions, while it perpetuates what would be considered outrageously brutal worker conditions in more economically advanced countries. Although it may be difficult to separate a reflection of underdevelopment from an instance of violation of the rights of rural workers in some cases, many unequivocal instances of labor rights violations of these workers have been documented.

The International Federation of Plantation, Agricultural and Allied Workers [IFPAAW], based in Geneva, Switzerland, has documented many such instances. Formed in 1959, this organization focuses not only on the more easily organized plantation workers, but also on the needs of landless workers, sharecroppers and subsistence agriculturalists. The latter have faced beatings, imprisonment and even death in building their organizations, particularly in Asia and Latin America. Last year, IFPAAW presented six official complaints to the International Labor Organization on violations of freedom of association and trade union rights, including violations in Honduras (five unionists killed and three injured), Colombia (five killed and one wounded) and Brazil (one woman worker killed).

The January and May 1984 issues of IFPAAW Snips document the following examples of agricultural workers' conditions and denial of worker rights:

1. South Africa: An International Labor Office report documents continued harrassment of black unions and tightening of government controls over unions. It also documents conditions of "brutality and cruelty" among black prisoners forced to work and notes the greatest use of prison labor is made by white farmers, "thus accentuating the unemployment of rural workers through 'free' prison labor." The report concludes that apartheid laws restricting non-prison labor, when combined with the extensive use of prison labor, "clearly creates circumstances which can only be described as exploitation akin to the early 19th century slave trade."

2. Brazil: On April 3, a union member working at a sugar mill in Alagoa Grande was murdered after asking for a salary increase. His hands and feet had been tied and his body had several knife wounds. Other coworkers had been threatened at gunpoint or maltreated after advancing similar claims. This followed the August 1983 murder of Margaridak Maria Alves, President of the Rural Workers Organization in Alagoa Grande.

The Rural Workers Federation of Sao Paolo successfully led a 3-day strike of 17,000 seasonal sugar workers that won modest sick benefits, limited holiday pay and a wage raise from approximately $4.44 to $7.00 per day (based on a worker cutting on average about 6 tons of cane during a ten-hour day).

3. Sri Lanka: In April, 600,000 tea and rubber plantation workers went on strike to press for wage increases and an end to wage discrimination. The strike was suspended when the plantation owners provisionally offered to raise wages by approximately 45 percent, institute equal pay for men and women, and guarantee a six-day work week.

4. Guatemala: ILO and ICFU officials have unsuccessfully sought information on the fate of American Yolanda Uriza, a woman labor lawyer kidnapped after returning to Guatemala under the 1983 presidential amnesty. Urizar had actively represented Coca-Cola workers pressing for better conditions. Reports indicate she has suffered torture and may be close to a mental breakdown as a rsult. Amnesty International and the IUF are pressing for her release.

5. Malaysia: A Malaysian Trade Union Congress report documented the "slave-like" existence of plantation workers on a palm-oil estate 150 Km southeast of the capital city of Kuala Lampur, a situation subsequently found to be widespread on many other such estates. Over 40 workers had been employed by a subcontractor to clear jungle for the estate, which is owned by the Federal Land Development Authority. Workers recounted the following conditions:

Few if any wages were paid to any workers in the past three years. The contractor "deducted" the cost of meager food rations and liquor from wages and claimed the workers were in debt to him.

Workers were forced to work from 4 a.m. to 5 p.m. or beyond, often without a lunch break. No holidays were allowed and only those too ill to work were given time off. No medical or educational facilities were provided. Workers were forced to live in huts housing goats.

Children older than seven were forced to work with their parents.

Workers who disobeyed orders were tied up, beaten, tortured, locked in chicken coops, and some women were sexually abused. Workers who sought to escape were usually captured by foremen and they or their wives and children beaten. Police often returned escapees to the subcontractors.

A worker's wife reportedly gang-raped by the employer's assistants after the worker was overheard talking about escaping. The worker was subsequently abducted while in the company of two officials from the National Union of Plantation Workers.

The report stimulated public inquiry into the situation of other Malaysian plantation workers and unearthed a broader pattern of labor abuse, including 25 workers who had not been paid for six years and instances where workers had been forced to sell their babies to pay debts.

Unrestricted marketing of hazardous pesticides to Third World countries was highlighted as a particular danger to agricultural workers at the first international meeting of the Pesticides Action Network [PAN] International. Deaths and poisonings from use of such pesticides is now estimated at over 400,000 a year. Many industrialized countries have banned specific pesticides from use as too hazardous, but they allow such pesticides to be manufactured for export.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having covered, in a general way, the importance of promoting international labor rights and giving some examples of generalized labor rights problems, I would like to discuss briefly some labor rights conditions in selected countries. Let me turn first to Taiwan, which is a major supplier of goods to the United States and which is a major beneficiary of the generalized system of preferences, one of our programs to aid to developing countries.

LABOR RIGHTS IN TAIWAN

Export processing zones have attracted multinational investment in the production of textiles, clothing, shoes, and electronics goods, often 100 percent for export. The zones offer tax concessions, Government guaranteed low wages (one-ninth of U.S. wage rates in 1978), and a highly productive work force. Young female workers predominate, as they are viewed as docile and willing to work for low pay. Girls as young as 12 have gone to work in the zones, often to supplement the incomes of their rural families, and the Government allows girls to graduate from school early to become export production workers.

Workers in assembly plants receive bare subsistence wages for 8- to 12-hour days. Monthly bonuses of up to 20 percent of the base wage can be forfeited for one tardiness of 5 minutes or use of accrued leave, which seldom exceeds 1 week per year. Workers are constantly exhorted to produce more.

Workers often live in crowded, company-owned dorms with no air-conditioning in 100° heat and high humidity, no potable water, no recreational facilities, and no social activities.

Health and safety regulations are lax or nonexistent, even where workers handle hazardous products.

Although about 22.5 percent of the labor force belongs to unions, in practice these organizations are controlled by the ruling Kuomentang Party, and the Ministry of the Interior appoints union leaders within enterprises, management often controls the selection of union dues to supplement its budget and distribute official propaganda through the unions.

Strikes are illegal under martial law, which has been in effect on the island since 1949. Although a liberal collective bargaining statute is on the books, there are no collective bargaining agreements in effect. The crime of inciting labor unrest is punishable by death. Unions do play a role in adjudicating worker grievances, but workers with complaints are often labeled "subversive" or "Communist," and are thus subject to prison terms. Workers who have petitioned the Government to hold an election to certify a union at their workplace have sometimes been denied the right to vote in that election.

Mr. Speaker, now let me turn to South Korea, which is another nation which benefits a great deal from favorable U.S. trade laws and which ships very large amounts of goods into the U.S. market and competes effectively with the goods produced by American workers.

SUPPRESSION OF LABOR RIGHTS IN SOUTH KOREA

South Korea's export-based industrial development has for the past 15 years achieved a remarkable statistical success, bringing growth rates that averaged more than 9 percent per year, enabling the Korean economy to enter the ranks of the newly industrialized countries and compete with Japan, Europe, and the United States in the marketing of products ranging from textiles to transistors, from toys to tankers. Hundreds of American companies have moved their production facilities to Korea in recent years.

However, this success has been achieved at a high price in human rights and dignity. An authoritarian police state has prevented workers from organizing genuinely representative unions, keeping wages cheap and working conditions harsh and inhuman for thousands of Korea's industrial work force.

These conditions are, in fact, the chief attraction for foreign investors in South Korea. As the Far Eastern Economic Review recently noted,

> Cheap labor has been one of three major factors—along with foreign capital and good planning—behind South Korea's successful industrialization efforts over the past 20 years. (July 19, 1984)

However, as the same issue points out, beneath the successful facade are problems which if not resolved, will quite likely undermine South Korea's economic miracle in the near future.

> Decades of government control have left organized labor seriously crippled, so much so that most observers contend that the Federation of Korean Trade Unions [FKTU] has reached the critical stage at which it must decide whether to stand up to its commitment or face growing isolation from its members, who are beginning to desert from the ranks.

The FKTU has been subject to Government manipulation and control since it was created in 1961 shortly after the coup d'etat of Gen. Park Chung Hee. Government interference and infiltration by the Korean CIA have hampered its independence for more than two decades, particularly since 1970 when special labor laws were promulgated that prevented the formation of unions in foreign firms or in industries vaguely related to "national security." In spite of this, however, the trade union movement slowly grew through the 1960's and 1970's to include by 1979 more than a million members in a movement with 17 national industrial unions, regional and city labor councils in every region of South Korea, and a number of genuinely representative union locals.

Since 1980, however, when the martial law regime of Gen. Chun Doo Whan drastically changed the labor laws and forced the resignation of hundreds of labor union officials, the FKTU has sharply declined in strength and influence. Real wages and working conditions have also worsened rapidly during the past 4 years as a result.

Official FKTU statistics indicate that its 1.1 million membership in 1979, out of South Korea's approximately 5 million eligible workers, declined by 4.4 percent in 1980, by 21 percent in 1981, and dropped a further 6.4 percent in 1983, to a level under 780,000. Other unofficial estimates of paid union membership put the figure as low as 100,000 members in 1983.

The cause of this plunge in union membership and influence was a series of drastic Government measures enacted under martial law in 1980 and later given ex post facto status in revised labor laws. These laws and martial law proclamations have decimated the unions, have virtually outlawed Protestant and Catholic ministries among workers, and have rendered the surviving religious and labor organizations helpless to relate to workers in any significant way. For workers, the result has been loss in real wages, increased danger and hardship in the workplace, lengthened hours and the lack of representation in grievance procedures. South Korean work hours are the longest in the world, its industrial accident and death rate the world's highest, according to the International Labor Organization.

The measures that brought about these changes include:

First, the August 12, 1980, martial law order for purification of labor unions and promotion of labor union purification movement (Doc. 1354-21208) and other supplementary measures. These so-called purification steps forced the resignation of 12 of the 17 national industrial union presidents, 106 provincial and regional labor union officers and 191 local union officers. Furthermore, hundreds of labor union members active in their local unions were forced to resign or were fired from their jobs during this purge.

As a result of this purge and the accompanying forced dissolution of all regional and city labor union councils, every local union was required to reorganize. Any union officers who refused to resign on August 20 were sent to Government purification education camps where they were subjected to brutal punishment for periods of from several weeks to several months. Most were then blacklisted by the ROK Government to prevent their reemployment in other firms.

Second, on December 31, 1980, the South Korean labor union law was amended to include the provision that "all dissolved labor unions and dismissed or expelled union officers from the date of August 20, 1980, until the present shall be considered to have been dissolved or subject to reelection orders in terms of article 32 of this law." This ex post facto measure deprived unions and individual union officers of any legal basis for appeal against the Government's forced purges. Article 32 of the labor union law states that

> When the administrative authority recognizes that a labor union . . . is likely to become detrimental to the public interest, it may . . . order the dissolution of the labor union or order reelection of its officers.

A provision had already been inserted into the new constitution enacted in September 1980, which stated that all special laws such as these labor laws promulgated under martial law could not be amended by later legislation without changing the constitution.

Third, the December 31, 1980 revisions of the labor union law also made the formation of new unions much more difficult, by the following restrictions:

Firms with less than 30 employees could not be organized.

In firms with more than 30 employees, a petition signed by 30 employees or 20 percent of the workers is required to be submitted in writing to the Government before a union can be recognized.

No person or organization outside the individual factory can be involved in organizing a local union, in collective bargaining, or conflict resolution. This provision was aimed at preventing labor counselling by religious organizations but also restricts contact between workers and their own national or regional union representatives.

Unions cannot include workers from more than one company.

Unions are prevented from being involved in political activity or supporting any political candidate.

In addition, laws regulating working hours were amended to allow employers greater legal freedom to extend workers' hours arbitrarily.

In 1981, these new laws allowed the Government to destroy, one by one, all strong unions. In January 1981, the mayor of Seoul ordered the Chonggye Garment Workers Union, in Seoul's notorious Peace Market sweatshop district, disbanded on the grounds that it included workers from more than one company. Union officers who protested this action were told they had no grounds for protest, since the union no longer existed. When they persisted, they were imprisoned. In the 3 years since then, working conditions in the Peace Market have seriously deteriorated. Child labor and 12 to 14 hour working days for wages less than $2.50 per day are now common. Tuberculosis and other work-related disease are again increasing.

Late in 1981, other unions that had been active at the workfloor level, were disbanded or their officers fired. By November 1981, the human rights movement in Korea had documented the forced dissolution of three unions—Chonggye Garment Workers in Seoul, the Bando Trading Co. and the Kyonggi Spinning Co.—the suppression of union organizing by Government and company authorities in 19 firms, and improper dismissal of union officials in six other firms. Dozens of companies fell months behind in payment of wages; workers who protested were fired.

By 1982, only two unions remained with strong worker participation. One of these was the American firm, Control Data. The other was the Wonpoong Textile Co. Plant in Seoul. Government and company pressure in both these companies led to bloody clashes between workers and supervisors, the firing of union activists, and the eventual closure of the factories.

In 1983, these was little labor activity in South Korea. But as the situation of workers continued to deteriorate, wildcat strikes became much more frequent. In the late fall of 1983, the Chun Government began to force the closure of all night schools for workers, arguing that these schools, conducted in local churches, were training grounds for socialism. Hundreds of volunteer teachers were arrested, tortured and forced to sign confessions that they were "socialists".

Since the beginning of 1984, unauthorized strike activity, sparked by taxi driver strikes in most of South Korea's cities, has increased to the extent that international business observers express their fear for industrial peace unless the ROK Government carries out some measure of reform. The Far Eastern Economic Review's annual summary issue on Korea, published July 19 this year, concludes its coverage of labor by the following assessment:

> What this all indicates is that the whole spectrum of South Korea's troubled labor movement is now moving into a dangerous phase of politicization. Nothing short of a fundamental institutional reform is expected to repel that threat. And unless the issue is squarely tackled, the disciplined rows of workers featured on the cover of this review could break ranks and the Chun Government could face some significant destabilization ahead.

Liberalization of South Korea's represssive labor laws is essential for the country's future economic success as well as for political stability and national security. Measures by the U.S. Government to encourage this reform are in our own long-term interest as well. A strong economy and a selfconfident government in South Korea which has the support of its people are vital to U.S. economic, political, and military interests in East Asia.

I strongly urge the administration to support labor rights in South Korea with the same enthusiasm it supports them in Poland, to distance itself from repression of these rights by right-wing dictatorship with the same fervor it attacks governments of the left that prevent free unions. We have an urgent responsibility to be consistent in this area, for our inconsistencies strengthen repression, encourage further capital flight by U.S. companies and hurt American as well as Korean workers.

LABOR RIGHTS IN THAILAND

Workers in Thailand face many of the problems of their counterparts in developing countries: Unemployment, underemployment, migration, and repressive laws. Even more hideous are the abuse of women and agricultural workers and child slave labor.

REPRESSIVE AND TOKEN LABOR LAWS

Thailand has a martial law government in spite of the fact that there is a constitution, elections, and a functioning parliament. Under martial law the Government can arbitrarily make decisions and try offenses in the military courts.

In recent years two laws, decree 8 and the anti-Communist laws, existed as an ever present threat to the Thai labor organizers. Decree 8—lifted in 1981—specifically prohibited strikes and lockouts. It was practiced with flexibility after 1977. While strikes were illegal they occurred and few workers were actually brought to trial. There were more strikes after 1981. Under the anti-Communist laws which are still in force people can be detained for up to 480 days without being presented before court. They can be tried in a military court. This law remains a threat and its aim is intimidation and repression. (Ampo Vol. 14 No. 2, 1982, page 58.)

Two specific Thai labor laws, the Labor Protection Law—1972—and Labor Relation Act—1975—set rules for working hours, women and child laborers, wages and severance pay. For instance, the law prohibits the employment of children under 12 and employers must obtain Labor Department permission for children under 15. While its provisions are progressive in practice violations carry light fines. Major infractions result in at most a $50 assessment. Thus, it is more profitable to break the laws and pay the fines than follow them. The laws seem to be more a demonstration for the rest of the world that Thailand has modern labor legislation than to protect workers. (Ampo Vol. 14, No. 2, 1982, page 58–59, and "The Dark side of Thai Children: Child Labour," a slideshow prepared by the Coordinating Group for Religion in Society.)

CHILD LABOR

Thousands of children, some as young as 6 years, are virtually sold into annual or lifetime work in farms, homes, factories, brothels, and massage parlors. Many fetch as much as $500.

Ms. Pranee Tinakorn, lecturer at Thailand's prestigious Thammast University, surveyed 115 children working in textile factories, construction sites, restaurants, gasoline stations, and mini-buses in the Bangkok metropolitan area. She found 97 percent of their parents sent the children to work to support the family financially. One 11-year-old child commented, "I came to work here because I was afraid my mother would not have anything to eat."

The 1981 report by the United Nations Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific said, "2 million Thai children under 16 years of age work in factories. A considerable proportion of children in the work force suffer from malnutrition or from hazards related to their work."

The worst working conditions exist in small unregistered—illegal—factories where ventilation is often poor and the heat oppressive. Some children work with dangerous chemicals like battery acid. In one textile factory children worked from 6 a.m. to 9 p.m. and then were locked up in the store room for the night so they could not run away. Children often get only rice and vegetables to eat and work despite untreated ailments.

Factory owners find the children's nimble fingers more profitable than those of adults and the children are easier to control.

The Thai Labor Department has few inspectors to check the tens of thousands of registered and unregistered factories. Even when inspectors find slave labor factories they can do little because of bribes and corruption. ("Thai Children Sold into 'Slavery,'" National Catholic Reporter, May 15, 1981 and Depth News Asia, August 14, 1981.)

AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

Thai agricultural workers for multinationals are often not covered by Government labor laws. On Castle and Cook's (DoleThai) pineapple plantation in southern Thailand almost all of the laborers are hired as temporary workers on a 3-month contract. This way they dodge labor laws. DoleThai can offer a new agreement every 3 months to keep the workers or dismiss them without compensation.

The unskilled and poor northeastern Thai often have no recourse to working under DoleThai's harsh conditions. Field workers get about $2 a day and work 6 days a week. There is only one doctor for the 3,000 workers on the plantation. Accidents occur nearly every day in the cannery where primarily women are employed. Workers receive minor compensation for injuries only if they are seriously handicapped or incapacitated. Then they will certainly be discharged. Housing on the plantation is inadequate. As many as six or seven workers squeeze into a room 15 feet by 21 feet. There are no private bathrooms. ("The Bitter Fruits," a Slideshow Prepared by the Coordinating Committee for Religion and Society, Bangkok, Thailand.)

MIGRATION

Many Thais from the northeast and northern parts of the country who were employed at U.S. air bases during the Vietnam War are now working in the Middle East. Job placement firms often cheat them by making false promises on wages. Women are notoriously badly treated. In some instances their passports are taken away and they become slaves in the households where they work. Numerous cases of sexual assault and rape have been reported. (Ampo, vol. 14, No. 2, 1982.)

LABOR UNIONS

Thai labor unions have only been allowed to function for 16 of the past 37 years. Thus, their growth and development have been greatly interrupted. Only 3.6 percent of the wage earners are organized. Many union members are in state enterprises which cannot strike. Moreover the state, employers, and politicians among others have infiltrated unions, corrupting their leaders, establishing yellow unions, and creating factionalism and splits. (Ampo, vol. 14, No. 3, 1982, pages 51–56.)

For example, some 10 labor officials have been killed over the last few years. The 1983 murder of labor leadder Khampun Wongkan is linked to the rise of private unions. He was deputy secretary-general of Metal and Steel Labor Union which is among the metal industry unions within the multinational plants like Datsun, BMW, Fiat, et cetera. His activities would have ultimately shifted the workers' activities away from the state enterprise unions to the private sector union, thus changing the labor situation that could more effectively challenge foreign exploitation of Thai labor. (Ampo, vol. 15, No. 1, 1983.)

LABOR RIGHTS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Blatant and morally outrageous kinds of labor rights violations are prevalent throughout South Africa. These violations are enshrined in South African law. They form an integral part of its vicious system of racial segregation known as apartheid. South African laws keep black workers—84 percent of all South Africans—from organizing effectively for better wages and working conditions.

For centures, black South Africans have been denied their freedom. They live under laws that segregate them from whites and deny them basic human rights, including labor rights.

Five of six South Africans are black. But they live in bondage in their own country.

They cannot live or work where they choose.

They risk going to jail if they strike for better wages and working conditions or demand simple justice on the job.

They virtually have no say in the government and laws that rule them.

Apartheid in South Africa runs on cheap labor. To stay out of jail, blacks must carry "passbooks" wherever they go. These record their fingerprints, work record, tax and family status, tribe and rae, and where they can legally live and work.

For black South Africans, home is not where they were born or choose to live—it is where the government decides to send them. Those no longer needed by white-owned businesses are sent to live in barren, rural wastelands—called homelands—chosen for them by whites.

As a result, black workers now earn, on the average, less than a third what white workers do. Over 60 percent of black urban families earn less than the white government admits is necessary to survive. Rural blacks are even worse off.

Black worker protests in South Africa go back to the beginning of this century. The largest African union, the Industrial and Commercial Workers Union, was founded in 1918 and 10 years later had 100,000 members. However, this and other black unions were destroyed by growing white minority government repression, including detention or "banning" (a form of house arrest that bars any public role or speaking by the "banned" person).

Black workers could not register their unions with the government and were excluded from all industry-wide council negotiations. They could only channel grievances through plant-level committees which were largely ineffective and lacked the auhority to negotiate legally binding agreements. By 1973, of South Africa's over 20,000 plants, only 27 had plant-level committees for black workers.

Since 1973, the government grudgingly has made some small, largely cosmetic changes in its labor laws affecting blacks. These have come about as a result of growing labor unrest and an unprecedented upsurge in the formation of black trade unions. Many of the black unions have explicitly rejected government registration requirements and sought to negotiate collective bargaining agreements with multinational corporations outside the government's legal framework.

Despite modest changes in labor laws, black workers who seek to improve their wages and working conditions continue to face nearly insurmountable government obstacles:

There is practically no protection against job dismissal for union activities.

There has been no government enforcement of supposedly binding plant agreements and no procedures for legal redress.

A host of interlocking laws really hamstring the ability of black workers to carry out strikes. Blacks for all practical purposes have been denied the right to strike since 1911. A slight change in government policy in 1973 held out a shred of hope, but only one of the over 750 strikes since 1973 was "legal." Even if a black worker participated in a "legal" strike, he/she cannot picket or attempt to convince other black workers not to strike. Employers also may legally dismiss and replace black striking workers, whether the strike is legal or not.

The government's broad definition of "subversive" activities under the Internal Security Act of 1976, the Riotous Assemblies Act of 1956 and the Terrorism Act of 1967 has been extended to reach the organization of trade unions and their activities. These laws permit detention without trial, indefinite detention without access to legal counsel while they deny any appeal of detention decisions. Individuals may be "banned" for up to 5 years, restricting their movement and barring them from meeting more than one person at a time, making speeches, publishing articles or being quoted.

Despite these legal barriers, black unions have in the past decade courageously pressed for worker rights. In 1973, a wave of spontaneous strikes for higher wages and working conditions hit Durban and neighboring industrial cities. After two months, over 70,000 workers at 150 plants had walked off their jobs. Since 1979, a new wave of strikes and worker protests has swept across South Africa. In 1983 alone, black unions engaged in over 300 strikes.

Black workers have paid a high cost for pressing for their rights. Since 1979 many black workers in at least 750 strikes have lost their pay, benefits and their jobs, while risking arrest and detention. Over 400 trade union members—including 56 officials and labor organizers—were detailed between 1981 and September 1983, many without any formal charges being brought against them for periods as long as one year. Dozens of trade union organizers have been banned from engaging in union activity. And two trade unionists have died in suspicious circumstances after detention by South African security police.

According to the 1983 Amnesty International Report, Neil Aggett, a white physician working as a union organizer, was found hanged in his cell at the Johannesburg police station on February 5, 1982. He had been detained 3 months earlier along with several other trade union officials. He was held incommunicado by the security police and was never charged. Following his death, other detainees alleged that he had been assaulted and subjected to electric shock torture by security police and, shortly before his death, subjected to 60 hours of continuous interrogation. The magistrate at the inquest dismissed the detainees' evidence and absolved the security police involved of any responsibility.

In 1982, many labor leaders were detained without charge or trial, including Dumile Makanda and Maxwell Madlingozi of the Motor Assemblers' and Components Workers' Union (MACWUSA) and four leading officials of the South African Allied Workers' Union [SAAWU]. Most spent several months in detention. Several were reportedly tortured. When three of the SAAWU leaders went on trial, all charges against them were dropped. Such repression of trade union activity is part and parcel of a larger pattern of systematic civil and human rights violations by the white-minority Government of South Africa. These violations have been documented not only by Amnesty International, but by the U.S. State Department and non-governmental organizations like the South African Council of Churches, the South African Catholic Bishops' Conference, and the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law.

IMPLICATIONS FOR U.S. POLICY

The Reagan administration has generally ignored overwhelming evidence of gross and systematic violation of internationally-recognized labor rights in South Africa. Conditions that would produce indignant and immediate response if they happened in Poland earn little more than a shrug from our White House.

U.S.-based multinational corporations, though they have responded more forthrightly than the South African Government to rising black workers protest—even to the extent of negotiating labor contracts with a few black unions—have continued to profit from the prolonged suffering of black workers. The 125 U.S.-based multinational corporations which have signed the Sullivan Code of Corporate Conduct continue—by their own accounts—to spend more on training white workers than black workers, to pay whites more than black workers, to keep blacks out of supervisory positions over white workers.

Those hurt include not only black workers in South Africa, but also American workers. For example, South African steel exports to the United States rose 5,000 percent from 1975 to 1983. Much of Baltimore's subway system has been built with South African steel produced by South Africa's government-owned steel corporation, ISCOR. ISCOR's entry into world markets was assisted by a panoply of South African Government assistance, including tax rebates, subsidies and laws limiting labor rights. The U.S. steel industry has been in a steep decline in recent years. American steelworkers accepted $3 billion in wage and benefit cuts last year alone. A key reason why South African steel was more competitive than U.S. steel production—and contributed to job losses here—was its lower cost attributable in large part to low wages paid black South African steelworkers and black coal miners who mine the coal essential to steel production. Thus, labor violations in South Africa, as in any other country, play a key role in forcing U.S. workers to accept lower wages and benefits and weaker health and safety standards. The ultimate irony is that the United States Steel Corp., suffering from increased foreign competition, helped make South Africa more competitive by selling ISCOR key steelmaking technology.

We need to begin to re-examine which of our tax and trade policies provide financial incentives for U.S.-based multinational corporations to invest in countries like South Africa where flagrant labor rights violations are endemic.

Labor in all countries in Africa, more than any other sector, is target of control and repression. The inability to achieve and enjoy political stability in Africa since independence some two decades ago, and the resultant emergence of authoritarian regimes, places labor in an unfortunate situation. Any form of organized labor is considered a potential threat to the regimes which seek to weaken the labor movement and it bargaining power.

Many of the African governments have still to ratify International Organization [ILO] convention including Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87). Morocco, Sudan, and Zambia are among those countries still to ratify the convention. The Right to Organize and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) has not been ratified by many countries including Nigeria, Liberia, Morocco, Zaire, and Zambia. Forced Labor Convention, 1930 (No. 29) has not been ratified by Ethiopia, Mozambique, Botswana, and Rwanda. Workmen's Compensation (accidents) Convention, 1925 is still to be ratified by Gabon, Ivory Coast, Togo, Benin, Ethiopia, Sudan, and Ghana. Minimum Wage Fixing Machinery (agriculture) Convention, 1951 has not been ratified by Nigeria, Rwanda, Burundi, Zaire, Tanzania, Chad, Libya, and Zimbabwe. Equality of Treatment (social security) Convention, 1962 has not been ratified by Cameroon, Nigeria, Zambia, Ghana and Ethiopia. Other ILO conventions on agrarian reform and rural development and specifically on the plight of rural workers such as (i) Plantations Convention, 1958 (No. 110); (ii) Labor Inspection (agricultural), 1969 (No. 129); Workers Representatives, 1971 (No. 135) and Role of Rural Workers' Organizations in the Economic and Social Development and Recommendation 149 on the same matter, 1975, (No. 141) have been ignored by some African countries. They justify their relations with labor on the basis of certain provisions in their constitutions and other local rules and regulations which place labor at the mercy of the regimes. Without a commitment to respect these ILO conventions, authorization rules are fostered with a resultant weakening of the labor movement and its bargaining power. The following measures have been used effectively by these regimes: (i) centralization; (ii) curtailment of the right to strike; (iii) dismissal and appointment of labor leaders; (iv) compulsory arbitration; (v) adverse pricing policy; (vi) ineffective labor legislation.

(I) CENTRALIZATION

In some Francophone countries; for example, Gabon, Central African Republican, Guinea, and countries such as the Congo, Ethiopia, and Libya, labor unions become an extension of the government, if not extensions of the political party. The government sponsors a labor center and places the leadership within the regime's control. In some cases, no union is allowed unless affiliated to the center or non-affiliates may be allowed but not given the privileges of access to government resources.

(II) RIGHT TO STRIKE

The right to strike is a vital part of the freedom of association. Strikes, unfortunately, in many instances are completely banned especially during states of emergency or at the advent of military rule. The more conventional method is to ban strikes in industries considered "vital" or of "national interest." The choice of which industry is "vital" is, of course, in the hands of the regime. Further, while in some countries strikes may not be considered illegal, the procedures to follow are so stringent, bureaucratic, and unreasonable, that it is practically impossible to go on strike.

(III) DISMISSAL AND APPOINTMENT OF LABOR LEADERS

Countries like Ghana, Liberia, Zambia, Morocco, and others have frequently intervened and conducted business on behalf of workers' unions to the exclusion of elected members of the unions. They have arrested and imprisoned labor leaders conducted union elections, incited union branches to disaffiliate from national union and even control the purse of the union.

(IV) COMPULSORY ARBITRATION

This is an instrument of control meant to curtail the right to strike. Because compulsory arbitration is actually meant to take the place of strike and because resolutions therefrom are placed in the hands of government and/or agencies, decisions taken are generally against labor interests considering the bias of the growth of labor vis-avis foreign capital.

(V) ADVERSE PRICING POLICY

Market prices in the cities and towns are kept very low. A ceiling is usually placed by government-formed market councils on food staples produced by peasant farmers. The price ceiling is a distortion aimed at keeping wages very low in the cities so as to create interesting conditions for capital investors. This ceiling hardly takes into account the farmers cost of producing the products. Further, these market councils not only distort prices, they retard payment to farmers, and their crops are gathered very late. In frustration, these farmers migrate into cities and fall into another cycle—unemployment or bargaining for wages.

(VI) INEFFECTIVE LABOR LEGISLATION

Much of the legislation designed to protect labor have remained laws merely on paper because of lack of resources, especially of the government agencies. Lack of organization also makes it difficult for labor to take care of itself in making sure that labor standards are strictly followed.

11. Specific case studies of labor violations in various countries

(I) GHANA—CASE NO. 1135

This case was examined by ILO committee at its meeting in February 1983, when it presented an interim report to its governing body. A complaint was presented by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the Organization of African Trade Union Unity and various other trade union organizations against the Government of Ghana. The complaint concerns antiunion repression directly or indirectly by the Government through the freezing of trade union bank accounts, the confiscation of trade union leaders' passports, the violent occupation of the TUC headquarters and the arrest of at least 10 general secretaries of the national unions. Those arrested included Mr. Kofi, general secretary of the Railway & Engineering Workers' Union; Mr. Yankey, general secretary of the Transport & Chemical Workers Union and the national chairman of the Road Transport Workers' Union. On April 29, 1982 these men were arrested and a protest delegation was brutally beaten by the police. The Ghanaian government alleged that these events occurred immediately after the December 31, 1981 Revolution which brought Lieutenant Rawlings to power.

(II) ZAMBIA—CASE NO. 1080

This was a complaint filed with ILO by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions [ICFTU] and dated October 5, 1981. ICFTU alleged the unlawful arrest of Frederik Chiluba, chairman of the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions; Newstead Zimba, general secretary of the organization and deputy worker member of the ILO Governing Body; Chitala Sampa, Assistant General Secretary of the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions and others. The Zambia Congress of Trade Unions alleged that these men had been unlawfully detained for having incited strikes which according to the government caused chaos. However, in a letter from the Zambian Government to ILO dated November 6, 1981 the government refuted such allegation stating simply that the union leaders were detained not for violating any labor legislation but to safeguard the interests of national security as stipulated under the Preservation of Public Security Act.

(III) LIBERIA—CASE NO. 795

This was a complaint presented by the Miners' International Federation against the Government of Liberia. The events of 1974 and 1976 involved the intervention by ministers to allow the release of trade union funds to a person not authorized by the union to receive such funds; the arrest of a trade union official and the dismissal of other workers; an attempt by the minister of labor to conduct union elections; the intervention by the Minister to incite a union branch to disaffiliate from a national union; and the prohibition of participation by certain unions and cooperatives in an election of representatives for collective bargaining purposes.

CONCLUSION

The cases on Ghana, Zambia and Liberia are among many brought before ILO by respective African labor organizations. Although some of these cases may have been settled, the fate of trade unionism in Africa remains in the hands of authoritarian regimes such as the racist regime in Southern Africa, the military regimes of such countries as Ghana, Upper Volta, Liberia, and Guinea, and totalitarian regimes like those of Ethiopia and Mozambique.

LABOR RIGHTS IN CHILE

Since the 1973 military coup d'etat, a fundamental part of the military government's strategy has been to break Chile's traditionally strong labor movement. After the military government's takeover, the right to collective bargaining was outlawed, and the large national unions which had historically existed in Chile were dismantled. Chilean workers lost the right to strike, hold elections or even attend meetings without police permission and supervision. The previously existing trade union leadership was repressed through arrests, executions, and exile.

In 1979, the military government put into effect the labor plan, a set of laws affecting labor, without consulting the majority of Chilean workers and the organizations that represent them. The labor plan was seen as a further attempt to weaken and destroy a historically strong and active labor movement. The labor plan severely restricts the rights of workers to organize, unionize, and to strike. For example, the labor plan excludes any provision for a nationwide labor organization of any kind. There can only be individual unions at the factory or plant level. No union can be formed unless the enterprise has been operating for at least 2 years. A worker must be employed for a minimum of 5 years before he or she can be considered eligible for election to a leadership position within the union. However, anyone who has "ever engaged in partisan political activity" can never be eligible, even if he or she has never belonged to a political party. Another provision of the decree bans any kind of union shop.

The most controversial aspect of the labor plan are the regulations governing the right of workers to strike. Although strikes are theoretically permitted, there are severe guidelines under which they must be carried out. The strike vote itself must be held in the presence of a civil authority before the contract has expired and must be approved by an absolute majority of the workers; the secret ballot is prohibited. If the workers vote to strike, the employer has the right to hire other workers to replace those on strike. Strikes can last up to 60 days, after which the employer has the right to fire all striking workers. And, Chile's President has the authority to issue a 90-day back to work order when strikes or lockouts jeopardize the "health or basic necessities of the populace, the general economy or national security." Lane Kirkland, president of the AFL-CIO, has characterized the labor plan as "reactionary and specifically designed to mutilate the democratic trade union movement."

Chilean workers suffer a double repression: that of the violation of their labor and human rights, and that of the violation of their economic rights as a result of the economic model imposed by the Pinochet regime. In February 1982, the president of the Public Employees Union [ANEF], Tucapel Jimenez, a former supporter of the military government, held a public press conference in Santiago to call for the formation of a united labor front to challenge the economic policies of the military regime. Jimenez was a key figure in the labor movement because of his ability to unite the various forces represented in a number of labor unions in Chile. One week after his press conference, Jimenez was found murdered in the taxicab he had been driving since being fired from his government job. His body showed signs of torture, and numerous witnesses testified that he had been followed extensively in the weeks before his assassination by agents of the Chilean secret police.

According to the National Institute for Statistics in Chile, unemployment in greater Santiago reached 21.7 percent in the period January-March 1983. This compares to 15 percent for the same period in 1982. This figure does not include those registered in the Minimum Employment Program [PEM] or the Occupational Program for Heads of Households [POJH]. In February 1983, there were 360,914 persons registered in PEM, and 112,601 in POJH. Together, this represents 13.5 percent of the national labor force. Workers registered in PEM receive 2,000 pesos per month, and those in POJH 4,000 pesos per month. The current legal minimum monthly salary in Chile is 6,222 pesos.

In response to the deteriorating economic situation, a National Command of Workers was formed, comprised of all the trade union confederations in Chile, representing the various political factions from the left to the "democratic" right, and the overwhelming majority of Chilean workers. The command is headed by Rodolfo Seguel, president of the Chilean Copper Workers' Union. On May 11, 1983 a national day of protest was carried out after the National Command of Workers called for a nationwide protest for that date, 350 people were arrested and 2 killed. It was estimated that over 70 percent of the Chilean people participated in the demonstrations. Because of the success of this first protest, the National Command of Workers called for a day of national protest on the 11th of every month.

The second national day of protest was held on June 14, 1983. Men, women and children banged empty pots in the streets and shouted antigovernment slogans. Eighty percent of the truckers' union members stayed off the road, only 55 percent of the buses in Santiago were reported on the streets, and 1,350 were arrested, and 3 more persons killed. On the following day, Rodolfo Seguel was arrested. In response to Seguel's arrest, copper workers in El Salvador, El Teniente and Andina Mines began a protest strike. CODELCO, the state copper company, announced that all striking workers would be fired. Eight hundred copper workers received dismissal notices on June 17, 1983. On June 20, 1983, Chile's labor leaders called for a general strike to begin on June 23, 1983. In response, the military government officially banned all media from making any mention of the general strike, demonstrations or protests. By that date, a total of six local union leaders and seven national leaders of the CTC were under arrest.

The strike commenced as planned, with 70 percent of the 46,000 member commercial truck owners going on strike, and only about 30 percent of national activity being halted. The strike was called off by the truckers' union on June 26, 1983.

While General Pinochet vowed that he would allow no more demonstrations, there have now been a total of 10 national days of protest in Chile. After the traditionally inactive summer months of December through February, Chileans once again took to the streets in protest. The CNT called for a protest on March 27 which virtually paralyzed the entire nation. Eyewitness reports state that the level of activity was so minimal it resembled a general strike rather than a day of protest. Shops closed early or did not open at all, traffic was at a virtual standstill, and General Pinochet imposed an 8:30 p.m. curfew, along with severe press censorship. Nine persons were killed and hundreds arrested.

For the first time since Pinochet's military government took power in 1973, Chilean workers held their own May 1 celebration in the open. The CNT called for the event, which was held in Bernardo O'Higgins Park in Santiago, and over 300,000 people attended. In his speech to the thousands of Chileans assembled there, Rodolfo Seguel announced plans for a general strike to be held some time within the following 90 days. In July, the CNT announced this time period would be lengthened to allow for better organization, but that a general strike is the next step in the peaceful mobilization of the Chilean people against the military government.

Let me wrap up this proceeding with some thoughts on where we go from here. In the past hour, we have heard some compelling statements about shameless exploitation of workers in many different walks of life in many different countries. I hope many of you who have listened to what has been said or who will read about this in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will take up the call to action. There are many steps that the President and the Congress can take to much more effectively promote international labor rights.

First, it is a continuing disgrace for our country not to have ratified any of the basic covenants of the International Labor Organization [ILO] on labor rights. To date, the United States has ratified only 6 of more than 150 ILO covenants that seek to protect the basic rights of workers; those 6 pertain exclusively to maritime rights on the high seas. Our credibility in international circles is crippled so long as our President and the Senate cannot bring themselves to support even these basic covenants affirming freedom of association, the right to organize and to bargain collectively, and the right to acceptable conditions of work. Surely, if the Soviet Union can embrace these rights along with prohibitions on forced labor and the exploitation of child labor before the community of nations at the ILO, then we can and ought to do no less.

Before next January, the Congress must decide whether to pass legislation to extend the Generalized System of Preferences [GSP]. For the past 10 years, this program has allowed nearly 140 lesser developed countries [LDC's] duty-free access to the U.S. market for a wide range of products. But with the global economy growing more interdependent every day, it is not enough to structure our trade programs like GSP to promote some vague notion of development in LDC's. It is imperative from this day on that very serious consideration be given in the Congress to who really benefits from preferential access to the U.S. market and whether broad-based economic development rather than the exploitation of cheap labor is being encouraged in LDC's. Fifteen countries, most of them significant labor rights violators, account for 89 percent of GSP imports. I am the sponsor of legislation (H.R. 5136) which seeks to constructively link GSP trade benefits to the extension of labor rights to the workers within beneficiary LDC's.

The offshore assembly provisions in our tariff provisions also need to be reexamined. Specifically, U.S. tariff items 806.3 and 807, adopted in 1930 and 1963, give American-based multinational corporations real incentive to subcontract items abroad for further processing: when imported back to the United States, duty is assessed only on the value added to the product overseas. Since 1966, the value of imports into the United States under just these two tariff items has skyrocketed from less than $1 billion to more than $18 billion in 1982. Over $7 billion of the 1982 total involves developing countries, with the top 10 accounting for 94 percent of the developing country total. Once again, major labor rights violators dominate the list.

Last year, the Congress approved the Caribbean Basin Initiative [CBI] at the urging of President Reagan. The CBI will provide duty-free treatment for about $1 billion of imports from that region, primarily beef and sugar and, to a lesser extent, steel, motor vehicle parts, electrical parts, tobacco and citrus fruit. The modest labor rights protection in this program authorization needs to be strengthened.

To cite another example, the Export-Import Bank provides subsidized loans, insurance, and guarantees to foreign state or private firms to finance purchase of American exports. In recent years, Exim has loaned nearly $4 billion annually, and in some years over half of the total funding has gone to pay for the purchase of U.S. aircraft. In the normal authorization and appropriation process for the Eximbank consideration ought to be given to promoting labor rights.

The development assistance dimension of U.S. bilateral economic aid to LDC's is an appropriate context in which to encourage respect for labor rights. The Agency for International Development each year makes grants and loans on concessional terms for development projects and programs in health, education, and agriculture. For those loans made for projects designed for purposes other than meeting basic human needs, promoting labor rights should be a key consideration.

Furthermore, the Overseas Private Investment Corporation [OPIC] provides an extensive array of services—funding of feasibility studies for potential investments, loans, loan guarantees, insurance protection against war, revolution, or insurrection, and investment missions—to encourage multinational corporate investment in developing countries. We should systematically discourage loans for corporate investment in countries whose governments treat their workers with contempt.

On another plane, there is much more our country in its leadership role can do through multinational aid channels to promote international labor rights.

The International Monetary Fund [IMF] provides soft-term balance-of-payment loans to developing countries which cannot be categorized as helping meet basic human needs. To the contrary, most IMF loans are approved with strong conditions attached that compel austerity and that often result in severe deterioration of the living standards of workers within recipient countries.

These days we are witnessing a steady erosion of labor rights by the governments of many developing countries as they struggle to deal with the international debt crisis. This trend raises serious questions. Should workers in developing countries disproportionately bear the brunt of the costs of economic stabilization and recovery? Should the IMF, through its austerity programs, be allowed to use government structures to limit the rights of workers. Perhaps we should consider directing the U.S. Executive Director to the IMF to vote against loans to countries that are flagrant labor rights violators.

The World Bank gives more medium- and long-term loans to developing countries to foster development. Even though some loans may help richer farmers at the expense of poorer ones or may promote exports at the cost of continued neglect of domestic needs in some countries, it is generally accepted that the World Bank is helping to meet basic needs in the Third World countries.

However, the World Bank since 1980 has expanded beyond project lending to giving broad "structural adjustment" loans. By 1983, this new type of loan accounted for nearly 10 percent of total World Bank lending. It is open to question whether these "structural adjustment" loans really respond to basic needs. It may be advisable to link "structural adjustment" lending to respect for basic labor rights within recipient countries.

Finally, regional banks for Asia, Africa, and Latin America give project loans similar to those available through the World Bank. Again, efforts could be made to differentiate basic needs loans from others and to direct the U.S. Executive Director to oppose loans for other than basic needs to countries that trample upon labor rights.

To sum up, in the 1980's and beyond it is essential that the concepts of prudent foreign aid and fair trade be linked to vigorous promotion of respect for international labor rights. I ask you to reflect upon the following excerpt from the 1980 Report of the Independent Commission on International Development issues, also known as the Brandt Commission:

> Exports that result from working conditions which do not respect minimum social standards relevant to a given society are unfair to the workers directly involved, to workers of competing Third World exporting countries, and to workers of importing countries whose welfare is undermined. They are also unfair to business concerns and countries which encourage social progress. Just as developing countries concern themselves with the industrial adjustments of other countries, so their own domestic industrial conditions will increasingly become a matter of international concern and review.

● Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, having served for many years within the organized labor movement, I understand the need for worker representation. Decent working conditions, fair wages, and adequate benefits—things people take for granted today—became reality for many Americans only afer organized labor struggled and negotiated for them. But this should not be solely a domestic phenomenon. International labor movements must be supported to improve conditions elsewhere in the world. However, many of our country's policies inadvertently suppress such unions. Our laws favor the exploitation of cheap labor abroad, and our companies, eager to make a profit, transfer American jobs elsewhere without a second thought.

The low prices of foreign goods make U.S. products less desirable, forcing our companies to subcontract work to facilities in other countries to lower their costs. By 1990, if the present trend continues, 35 percent of American cars will not be built here. A financially troubled, domestic steel company even recently arranged to use imported semifinished British steel, since its own would cost too much.

An indication of the growing dependence on foreign services can be found by looking at the application of Tariff Laws 806.3 and 807, regulations allowing the processing or assembly of U.S. parts abroad at special duty rates. In 1966, only $1 billion of goods fell under the benefits of these provisions. But by 1982, the amount rose to $18 billion. These goods leave American factories unfinished, go to foreign assembly lines, and then reappear here on store shelves. They may be cheaper than goods made completely in the United States, but what good are slightly less expensive products if many Americans do not have the jobs and income to afford them?

The exploitation of foreign workers also does damage to the achievements of or own unions. A few years ago, auto factory workers took pay and benefit cuts to keep their jobs. This unfortunate step was claimed to be necessary due to poor car sales during the recession. But when the earnings of automakers recently skyrocketed, these profits did not go back to the workers who sacrificed to make the recovery possible. The money went to industry executives who gave themselves huge bonuses. To add injury to insult, President Reagan recently urged the United Auto Workers not to ask for too much in upcoming labor negotiations. He fails to realize that too much already has been asked of our working class.

Companies can get away with such abuse because of the existence of cheap foreign labor. Our workers continually live under the threat of having their jobs exported or terminated if they do not give up some of their benefits, bonuses, and pay.

Many U.S. companies have moved part of their operations to export processing zones [EPZ's], areas designated by other countries to lure outside investment. Manufacturers are given economic incentives such as lower taxes, wages, and interest rates to set up a factory in an EPZ. The vast majority of times, these savings come straight out of the pockets of the laborers.

EPZ factories seek out illiterate workers—mostly women—to perform monotonous tasks for low wages (sometimes for about $1.50 a day). The standard working week is 48 hours long, and overtime is common and often mandatory. Workers cannot keep their jobs long enough to obtain pay increases or pension plans. Sick leave, holidays and vacations rarely exist. The mechanisms to correct these injustices—unions, collective agreement, and strikes—are also often banned. Sadly enough, the number of EPZ's continue to grow, and American companies continue to flock to them.

I come here today to join my colleagues in support of international labor movements. We owe it to workers at home and abroad to put an end to cheap, exploitative labor. The violations currently taking place must be made public and condemned. Organizations such as the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the International Labor Organization should be praised for their efforts to document injustices and to organize workers. We should use our country's political and economic powers of persuasion to put an end to these unfair labor practices. We must make unnecessary investment abroad less lucrative by revising tax and tariff laws. As my history in the labor movement shows, I will be in the forefront of this effort. I urge my colleagues to join with me. By taking these steps, we will retain what this country needs most: jobs; we will export what workers in other countries deserve: labor rights.●

● Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, we are taking this time today to address the issue of international labor rights because we feel that this issue is all too often neglected when human rights issues are addressed. In fact, the image that comes to mind when the term human rights is used is the image of political prisoners. Human rights is equated with free speech and the free practice of religion. That is correct. But concern for human rights is a much broader concern than these issues, a concern that certainly includes what we call labor rights: the right to organize, to bargain collectively, to seek better wages and workplace conditions.

Those of us who have worked over the years to improve U.S. development assistance programs which are intended to help people in developing countries must face the fact that the ability of people to act to end their hunger and poverty is a far easier task when their rights are protected. Those of us who are concerned that our trade policies take into account the needs of all people in developing countries, must realize that the ability of poor people and workers to earn a fair wage and share fully in the benefits of the increased trade that the United States offers depends as much on their ability to defend their interests as it does on the trade benefits themselves.

Just last January, the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America recognized the importance of labor rights when it stated that "[a]ssuring an equitable distribution of economic benefits will require both job-oriented development strategies and trade unions to protect workers rights." I think that we need to reaffirm this position taken by the Kissinger Commission.

The importance of labor rights is highlighted by the experience of Brazil. Although Brazil attained dramatic rates of economoc growth in the 1960's and 1970's, this progress was achieved while civil liberties were suspended. Union and peasant leaders were imprisoned or disappeared. Brazil's expansion was based on an aggressive trade policy, yet there is little evidence to suggest that the poor and hungry people of Brazil shared much in the benefits of this trade-induced growth. What is most significant in the recent political abertura in Brazil is the prominent role that the labor movement has played. It is no accident that as workers have been able to participate actively in political life again, Brazil's return to democracy has been greatly strengthened.

While Brazil offers us some encouragement, we must nonetheless be more attentive to the situation of workers in developing countries. As more and more developing countries attempt to turn their economies around and recover from the worldwide recession of recent years, there will be increasing pressure on them to lower the cost of doing business in their countries. This pressure is easily translated into pressure on workers and farmers to reduce their claims for wages and fair prices. There is no doubt that in many countries there is pressure to bring workers' wages into line. But in line with what? Certainly not the wage rates prevailing in the industrialized world. Instead the pressure is to bring wages in line with the expectations of export oriented companies who hope to compete in the world market on the basis of low-labor costs. Similarly, as countries which are deeply in debt have to come to terms with the International Monetary Fund or seek loans from the World Bank, they will be strongly encouraged to undertake structural adjustment programs. These adjustment programs have historically been accompanied by restrictions on workers. We must be sure that in our attempts to assist developing countries in their recovery from the world recession we do not support policies which work against labor rights.

Mr. Speaker, our efforts to protect labor rights do make a difference. Several years ago, when union members were defending their right at the Coca-Cola franchise in Guatemala, they received support from workers and legislators around the world. Between 1978 and 1981, eleven employees of the Coca-Cola franchise were killed in a bitter struggle to maintain the union. As a result of a great deal of pressure, the Coca-Cola franchise was taken over by the parent corporation and a new labor agreement was reached. Incidentally, I would like to commend my colleague, Don Pease, for his leadership on the Guatemalan Coca-Cola issue during 1979 and 1980.

I would like to make one last point, Mr. Speaker. Labor rights for people in developing countries are clearly linked to economic justice for workers in the United States. How many times in recent years have we seen U.S. companies pack up their operations and move off to a sunnier economic climate, where, coincidentally, wage rates are much lower than they are in the United States and there are no unions to worry about? I am not simply talking about companies that leave the Frost Belt; more and more we are also seeing companies leave the Sun Belt as well. In a many cases, the low wage rates in developing countries are artificially maintained by governments that deny human rights and the workers' right to organize. If the lack of labor rights protections lures industries away from the United States to these developing countries, then the U.S. worker is being asked to pay a high price for his or her own hard won labor rights.

For this reason, if for no other, we must make our position clear: that we will always support the efforts to people to organize themselves and participate actively in decisions that affect their economic well-being.●

● Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I enthusiastically welcome the opportunity to participate in this important and relevant special order on international labor rights. I want to commend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] for his leadership in calling this most worthwhile and timely initiative.

As chairman of the Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, I am acutely aware of the relationship between labor rights and a free society. In fact, one of the principal activities of the subcommittee is to promote respect for international labor rights. Clearly, the way workers are treated in a country is a critically important indicator of that nation's political orientation and its level of respect for human rights. When workers are not allowed to assemble, associate freely or join trade unions, when workers' wages bear no relation to labors performed, and when there is no regard for workers' health and safety, such a government is, most likely, closed and oppressive.

In a world where most governments claim their powers are derived from the people, looking at workers' rights is one of the primary methods of separating rhetoric from reality. A close connection exists between a democratic form of government and respect for human rights, and most democracies possess excellent human rights records. This, of course, is no accident. True democracies are based on the freely given consent of the governed and respect for human rights is built into the very foundations of democratic governments. Moreover, consent can only be given freely if the means for free expression of consent, or of dissent, exist; such means include freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom of association and assembly, free elections and an independent judiciary. When human rights abuses do occur in a democracy, the government is held accountable and, thus, violations tend to be self-correcting.

In addition, democracies are maintained, and minority rights protected, through multiple and diverse interests. A free press has a natural interest in securing freedom of opinion, as churches have in securing freedom of religion. Thus, when workers can form trade unions, assemble and associate freely, and when they can convey their concerns directly into the political process, they are not only protecting their own interests, but also ensuring the survival of democracy.

Labor rights are not exclusively an American, or even a Western concept, but are acknowledged by societies throughout the world. In fact, these rights are recognized as universal and one of the fundamental elements of human rights. References to international labor rights appear in a number of important international human rights documents including the European Convention on Human Rights, the American Convention on Human Rights, the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Clearly, we must continue to expose the injustices and atrocities suffered by many of the world's workers. Our Nation's interests are served by actively promoting respect for international labor rights. I am encouraged by the special order here today because it represents, I believe, a major step toward this end.●

● Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I commend my good friend from Ohio for taking out this special order concerning international labor rights. I would like to discuss the status of labor practices in the Philippines.

In September 1972, martial law was imposed in the Philippines. Under martial law many trade union leaders were arrested. A new labor code was introduced, curtailing a number of rights and privileges of workers. In 1975, following a strike and sit-in at LaTondera Distillery in Manila, President Marcos issued a decree which forbade all strikes, picketing and lockouts. Since that time martial law has been repealed and the right to strike restored in theory. But the policies of the Marcos government and the current economic conditions have kept labor conditions from significantly improving.

The government rule under Marcos has contributed to the deterioration of labor conditions in the Philippines. Since martial law was abolished in 1981, Marcos has continued to use his personal power to control the government. Workers supposedly have the right to organize under the Constitution, but in reality this is rarely the case. Marcos has done everything in his power to limit the influence of labor unions. He has insured the passage of legislation making it illegal to form picket lines that block the entry or exit to a factory. Furthermore, the Minister of Labor can designate any strike automatically illegal that is against national interest, eliminating virtually any export-related industry strike.

Marcos also has made the organization of a powerful union virtually impossible in the Philippines. The Trade Union Congress is the only officially recognized national trade union, representing 1.3 million workers. Many workers complain is serves merely as an umbrella for the policies of Marcos, instead of arguing for higher wages and collective bargaining practices.

The labor movement itself is very fractious, with many diverse labor unions representing only one-seventh of the workforce. It is difficult to convince workers to shed their individual affiliations and unite. Union leaders are often under military surveillance which further discourages unification. In just 2 months in 1982, approximately 50 trade unionists were arrested in the Metro Manila area. Included in these arrests was Felixberto Olalia, chairman of the May First Movement [KMU], the primary active labor organization opposing oppressive labor laws.

Since the assassination of former Senator Benigno S. Aquino, Jr., in August 1983, hundred of millions of dollars have left the country, creating a virtual financial disaster. Recent figures on Manila from the Ministry of Labor and Employment show more than 44,000 people laid off by 1,100 firms between January and May of this year, twice the rate of last year for the same period. Furthermore, private economists estimate inflation is at nearly 40 percent and unemployment is at 23 percent. Both are expected to continue to rise.

The economic crisis is further magnified by the foreign exchange crisis. The Philippines is a major export processing zone for many multinational firms. These firms hire cheap labor to put the finishing touches on export products. Unfortunately, 87 percent of the export value leaves the country. The foreign exchange crisis has caused many multinational firms to shut down their operations in the Philippines. An independent research group, the Center for Research and Communication, estimates more than 300,000 workers will lose their jobs in 1984 with the foreign exchange crisis.

With the current economic crisis and the repressive Marcos government the outlook for labor is grim. Moreover, our own U.S. multinational firms apparent lack of sensitivity to the plight of the Filipino workers only adds to the bleak situation. Considerable reform on both an economic and political level must occur before the Filipino laborer can receive fair and just treatment.

For our own U.S. labor interests, we also need to be concerned with the labor practices in the Philippines. Marcos has enticed foreign production in his country with his repressive labor policies. Yet despite the surge of multinational investment in the Philippines, the economy remains in shambles. Neither the oppressed and underpaid Filipino worker nor the American worker benefits from the multinational role. As the United States loses more of its domestic production abroad, fewer jobs exist at home, making a labor crisis such as the one in the Philippines a major concern for the U.S. labor force as well.●

● Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to participate in this discussion of international labor rights. Fair treatment of the working man is a crucial element of a just society. Labor unions in our Nation have made many contributions to a better America. In too many parts of the world today, workers are abused and exploited.

I would like to look specifically at the Soviet Union tonight. Their records of vicious human rights violations is a world tragedy.

Joseph Stalin once said,

> The most remarkable thing about socialist competition is that it creates a basic change in people's view of labor, since it changes the labor from a shameful and heavy burden into a matter of honor, matter of fame, matter of valor and heroism.

Well, that all sounds very good. But as a source of truth more reliable than Stalin puts it:

> By their fruits ye shall know them. (Matthew 7:20)

Let's take a look at the state of labor rights in the Soviet Union, the fruits of communism.

The State Department has indicated that the Soviet Union is exploiting the world's largest system of forced labor. They estimate that there are 4 million involuntary workers in about 1,100 camps. Of the 4 million people in the forced labor system, at least 10,000 are considered to be political and religious prisoners. These are the fruits of communism.

Undersecretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger said last year that,

> The Soviet forced labor system gravely infringes internationally recognized fundamental human rights.

Evidence available to him showed that the system produces large amounts of goods for export "often under harsh and degrading conditions."

In 1982 the International Commission on Human Rights stated that the U.S.S.R. continues the deplorable practice of forced labor in manufacturing and construction projects, including the Siberian gas pipeline. Also, prisoners imprisoned for their political and religious beliefs, among them women and children, are forced to work under conditions of extreme hardship including: Malnutrition, inadequate shelter and clothing, and severe discipline. Many prisoners have died.

The Soviets find it easier and cheaper to use forced labor. It is consistent with their philosophy that citizens exist to serve the state. This is not a new attitude. Since shortly after the Bolshevik Revolution this has been the policy. There were as many as 15 million, 15 million people in slave labor camps under Stalin. These are the fruits of communism.

The Communist philosophy is not difficult to understand. When you look at history, it comes down to this: The essence of communism is blood, blood, blood. Everywhere communism goes there is destruction of life and property. We see this clearly in Central America right now. These are the fruits of communism.

For all their fine talk about labor rights, the Soviets continue to direct and support the heavy-handed suppression of labor rights in Poland—and all the countries they dominate. The Soviet position on truly free union is very clear. They do not want them, and will jail those who do.

Both the AFL-CIO and the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions have expressed concerns for the violated rights of their fellow workers behind the iron curtain. One major issue is the use of slave labor on the Siberia-Europe gas pipeline. The workers come from many places. It has been charged that unwilling Vietnamese are being forced to work to pay off the debts of North Vietnam to Russia. These are the fruits of communism.

Witnesses at hearings of the International Commission on Human Rights have testified about the pipeline construction practices. They speak of the bad food situation, insufficient clothing and accommodations as well as lack of medical care. There are many dozens of camps alongside the gas pipeline, among them a number for women. The workdays may last 12 to 16 hours. Proper hygiene and bath facilities are nonexist ent. The laborers are not allowed to write letter or be visited by relatives. Women are sometimes exposed to sexual terror. Physical conditions are to say the least, brutal. These are the fruits of communism.

We as a nation must oppose these type of abuses. They are numerous in the U.S.S.R. a stand must be taken. In the Soviet Union the so called worker's paradise has become a worker's prison.

The right to be treated with dignity does not cease to exist when a person enters the workplace. Respect for the working man is one of the marks of a humane nation. I fully endorse this noble effort to focus on the need for international labor rights.●

● Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague, Congressman DONALD J. PEASE, who has organized this much needed special order on the importance of international labor rights.

In my capacity as chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus Task Force on Haitian Refugees, I would like to take this opportunity to focus on the status of industrial labor rights in Haiti.

A discussion of industrial labor rights in Haiti necessarily focuses upon the export-oriented assembly industry which has been touted by some observers as a dynamic sector. The export-oriented assembly industry in Haiti, according to the World Bank, employs some 60,000 people and is responsible for providing survival income for many more than that in the overcroweded slums of Port-au-Prince. This sector was responsible for $94 million of exports in 1983, an increase of some $60 million for 1976. However, two-thirds of this value is due to manufactured items assembled from imported materials. The product mix includes clothing, shoes, toys, electrical transformers, switching gear, and electronic goods.

This export-oriented assembly industry, however, is based on the lack of worker rights and organization, and has not operated to transfer capital and technology to the Haitian nation. There is a notable absence of linkage to other sectors of the economy.

It is noteworthy that manufacturers involved in the Haitian assembly industry according to the World Bank "generally appear satisfied, and state that Haiti is one of the most competitive locations for assembly operations in the Caribbean when aimed at the U.S. market using U.S.-origin components."

Frequently mentioned as "attractions" by the manufacturers operating in the Haitian export-oriented assembly industry are the low wage levels and the availability of a large supply of eager and hardworking labor. The minimum wage in Haiti is presently $2.64 per day with an increase to $3 scheduled for October 1, 1984.

Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely exploitative situation. It involves the exploitation of workers fleeing from a stagnating agricultural and rural sector and desperately seeking any employment in an attempt to survive. With inflation on the increase at 6 to 8 percent per year and the price of basic necessities subject to taxation imposed under an IMF agreement, the wage structure is inadequate to provide a minimal standard of living. It should be noted that the cost of living in the modern sector of Port-au-Prince is comparable to that of New York City.

In 1979 and 1980, a cautious but independent Haitian press began to denounce the exploitation of the Haitian workers by their employers. This independent press was a partial result of the human rights policies of the Carter administration. Following the U.S. election of 1980, the Haitian Government moved against journalists and others resisting this gross exploitation.

The winds of freedom that blew for a few months in Haiti in 1979 through 1980 were not without impact on the close to 1 million people living in Port-au-Prince. Those with a stake in exploitation in Haiti became alarmed. An incipient labor union movement began to arise in several of the larger assembly factories. On November 18, 1980, the Government of Haiti moved, and this movement disappeared. Labor leaders were arrested and expelled.

The destruction of the incipient labor movement was a tragedy for all who wish Haiti and its people well. The problem confronting those within Haiti and those of us abroad who seek to encourage development in Haiti is that power is so unevenly distributed that justice is incredibly difficult to achieve. This problem became even more severe with the crushing of the incipient labor movement in 1980. Haiti raises, in the starkest of terms, the reality that when collective power in the form of dominant sectors in a society exploits weakness, it can never be contained unless countervailing power is projected against it. So, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that any serious discussion of development in contemporary Haiti must include a plan for power sharing and the empowerment of the powerless. In the export oriented industrial sector, this necessarily means the restoration and development of a free labor movement with all the rights of association that that implies.

The presentation and implementation of the Caribbean Basin Initiative through the passage of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act as it applied to Haiti, brought the issue of international labor rights to the negotiating table. In order to gain designation for the benefits under the Caribbean Basin Initiative, Haiti had to enter into negotiations with our Government and subsequently agreed to amend its labor code to accommodate expanded labor rights. In the Government of Haiti's official designation letter to our Government, Haiti agreed to do the following:

First, amended article 266 of the previous labor code to change from 15 to 10 the minimum number of members needed to start a trade union. Completed.

Second, amended article 276(5) of the former labor code by deleting the requirement of a 6-month job attachment for workers to be elected union officials. Completed.

Third, amended article 278(1), by deleting section (1). This section required unions to furnish all information requested by the Ministry of Social Affairs. Completed.

Fourth, amended article 179, by deleting section (D). This section prohibited political activities by trade unions. Completed—see article 242 of Revised Labor Code of March 5, 1984. However, section (d) of this article still prohibits unions from taking part in activities "foreign to its objectives."

Fifth, an announcement will be made in the official gazette stating that the registration requirements of the penal code do not apply to trade union organizers. Not yet done as of May 8, 1984.

Sixth, abolished article 230 of the Penal Code relating to forced labor. This was a recommendation of the International Labor Organization. Completed.

Seventh, modified article 400 of the Organic Law of Social Affairs to limit the inquiries made of trade unions to labor violations. Completed.

Eighth, the article authorizing the office to intervene in the drafting of collective bargaining agreements will also be modified to specify intervention needed to implement other provisions of the labor code. The Government can only impose contract settlements in accordance with law. Not yet done.

Ninth, the Government will ask the International Labor Organization to assist in a study of the possibility of permitting strikes following a decision by the council or, alternatively, of making council decisions binding only for essential services. Under present law, strikes are circumvented through a system of binding arbitration of the Superior Arbitration Council. International Labor Organization not yet asked.

Tenth, the Government has informed all trade union leaders that federations are permitted. The labor code provided for federations, but the last federation attempted, CATH, was not recognized and then it was disbanded by the Government in 1980. Completed—See Bulletin de Nouvelles of January 6, 1984.

Eleventh, Haitian law permits trade unions and federations to affiliate with international trade union organizations. The Government has informed trade union leaders of this fact and has written directly to international organizations to advise them that they are welcome to visit Haiti to meet with trade unionists, view working conditions, and conduct educational programs. (A summary of this letter will be published in the "Bulletin des Nouvelles" of the Labor Department and in the local media.) The Government letter to trade unions also said that federations have a right to affiliate with international organizations. The letters to international organizations went to AFL-CIO, ORIT, and ICFTU. Minister Achille indicated orally that CLAT would be allowed in if they did not engage in controversial political activities. Completed—See Bulletin de Nouvelles, January 6, 1984.

Twelfth, trade union leaders are free to attend meetings of such international organizations and participate in training programs in Haiti or abroad. To our knowledge, none of the Haitian union leaders have gone abroad for such purposes nor have they sought Government of Haiti's permission to do so.

Thirteenth, concerning the "Voice of Labor," a government radio program "some of these programs in the future will deal with the changes in the labor code, the right to form unions and federations, and the procedures to follow in reporting violations of labor legislation, such as the minimum wage." As of May 8, 1984 "La Voix de Travail" had temporarily suspended its programming, according to Radio Nationale newsroom director Lionel Desmarattes. However, the program did broadcast two shows in 1984 dealing with labor issues.

Fourteenth, every (minimum wage) infraction is reported by labor inspectors and penalized. Workers who report violations will be protected from punishment by employers. See Le Moniteur of November 24, 1983, article 26. According to this clause, the labor inspectors investigate and report all types of workplace violations. However, there is no reference to worker-protection with relation to reports of violations.

Fifteenth, workers are subject to certain deductions for the purpose of meeting the fiscal obligations of the general welfare as provided by law. No other deductions in worker pay are made. Although the U.S. Embassy has not found any legal references to this practice, it has alleged that some workers are "forced" to buy national lottery tickets at their place of employment.

Sixteenth, the agricultural workers cutting cane in the Dominican Republic receive, in addition to their travel documents, a copy of their individual labor contract. The International Labor Organization charged that workers were not given a copy of their contract. The U.S. Embassy has no new information on this, although it hopes that the situation will be corrected under the 1985 Government of Haiti-Government of the Dominican Republic cane cutter contract.

Seventeenth, before each group leaves, the Ministry holds a meeting at the place of embarkation to educate workers on their rights and obligations as outlined in their work contracts. The Ministry explains to workers how protests can be recorded whenever a worker feels that the contract has been violated. The International Labor Organization recommended that the government do more to inform workers about the working conditions in the Dominican Republic. The U.S. Embassy has no new information on these issues although they hope that the situation will be corrected under the 1985 contract.

Eighteenth, the Haitian Embassy in the Dominican Republic has been directed to cooperate with the Dominican Republic in order to (a) assure that no workers will be deprived of their contract or travel documents, (b) promote better working conditions, (c) improve the quality of Haitian inspections, (d) ensure that workers receive land for food cultivation, that plantations pay the guaranteed minimum wage for 8 hours work, and that workers can elect delegates to supervise working conditions. The International Labor Organization charged that workers were not allowed to keep their travel documents, that workers did not receive the minimum wage, and that working conditions were very poor and violate the contract. As far as the U.S. Embassy knows, the Government of Haiti still plans to send a delegation to Haitian migrant worker sites in Dominican state-owned sugar plantations to study these problems.

Ninteenth, the Government of Haiti invites the U.S. Government to continue meeting with Haitian workers in order to observe the progress that our free trade union movement will be making. Both U.S. Embassy and Department of Labor personnel have been free to meet with Haitian workers without Government of Haiti interference.

Twentieth, the Government of Haiti plans to write the International Labor Organization to ask for technical assistance for carrying out a professional training program for Haitian inspectors. Awaiting International Labor Organization action.

The Government of Haiti has, in fact, made many of the legal changes. I have noted above the status of the Government of Haiti's responses.

However, the test of a government is not what it says on paper but what it does in practice. In practice, there are still no labor unions operating today in Haiti in the export oriented assembly industry and the exploitation continues.

Additionally, the AFL-CIO has yet to receive an expected invitation to begin involvement and affiliation with unions in Haiti through the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions. In short, other than the legal changes in the labor code cited above, almost nothing has been done to permit in concrete form the functioning of free trade unions in the export oriented assembly industry.

Mr. Speaker, we have a moral and political responsibility to follow this situation in Haiti closely. The association of our Nation with a system of exploitation and denial of labor rights in Haiti is not in the interests of the people of the United States of America. We must monitor, and if necessary, refine our trade and investment laws to ensure that fair labor practices are encouraged by programs such as the Caribbean Basin Initiative.

On March 9, 1983, Pope John Paul II, at a mass given by him entitled "Something Must Change Here," emphasized his solidarity with the poor and the oppressed. He said,

> The church retains a prophetic mission which is inseparable from her religious mission * * *. The church's role is not just to accuse, not just to arouse consciousness of evil, but to contribute positively to recovery by mustering all consciences * * * to act in conformity with the Gospel and the church's social teaching.

The Pope has stated the manner in which we must address injustice in Haiti and particularly the plight of the oppressed industrial workers of Haiti.

Shortly thereafter the seven bishops of Haiti issued their own pastoral letter in which they urged an end to all that goes against human rights. Their pastoral letter spoke against "all forms of attack against the dignity of man and woman, all forms of illegal dispossession, all forms of exploitation of wage earners and service personnel, all forms of usury and illicit means of accumulating wealth, all forms of violation of justice, all forms of torture or of physical and moral oppression and all arbitrary arrest without warrant and illegal imprisonment without judicial process."

The Catholic Church of Haiti has indeed given us what our mission should be and instructions as to how we should proceed to ensure that U.S. trade and investments in Haiti do not work to deepen the injustice which exists in that troubled land.

The attitudes of the Haitian people toward our Nation will, in no small way, be affected by the degree to which our presence in that country as represented by our private sector investment, contributes to a fair distribution of the benefits of that investment.

Again, my appreciation to my colleague, Congressman DONALD J. PEASE, for providing me with an opportunity to discuss the importance of international labor rights in Haiti.●

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the working men and women of the United States and the labor unions who represent them played a fundamental role in building this Nation and nourishing the American values of freedom and equality. We are fortunate indeed to live in circumstances which permit the rights which have permitted the American labor movement to flourish.

The contrast between the rights that we enjoy here and those that are systematically suppressed and circumscribed by the authorities in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe belie the claim that these countries are a "working man's paradise."

According to Communist theory, the rights of the working class are supreme, and the government acts in the interests of the working class. The reality, however, mocks this theory, as was so eloquently indicated by recent events in Poland. The workers, once again attempting to create a "socialism with a human face," were relentlessly and callously hounded. For one brief, shining moment, the workers of Solidarity shared the podium with the government when they signed the highly symbolic Gdansk Agreements, guaranteeing the rights of workers to organize a free labor union.

American workers know well how difficult the struggle for their rights was. The miners of Harlan County, the martyrdom of Joe Hill, and the Triangle Shirt Factory fire recall the suffering of a nascient labor movement, but these events also recall their strength of spirit. But it still came as a shock to many in Poland and in the United States when martial law was declared in 1981, ending in one moment the aspirations of millions. Overnight, the Government deployed military forces throughout the Nation. All labor union activities were restricted, and labor leaders were followed and harassed. Free and independent labor unions were surpressed by Government decree backed up with the power of the army. The authorities issued a decree requiring, "all men between the ages of 18 and 45 years, who are considered to be unemployed, to report for compulsory work."

This, Mr. Speaker, is only the tip of the iceberg. The situation in the Soviet Union is unfortunately very similar. Not only are the workers of the Soviet Union confronted with similar denial of labor rights, they also face forced labor camps if they are found guilty of "anti-Soviet activity" or of leading a "parasitic lifestyle." This callous treatment has been fully institutionalized in law and in practice. How can any country which routinely victimizes its workers by using forced labor call itself civilized or argue that it represents the interests of the workers.

Dissidents are routinely sentenced to long prison terms at forced labor because of their independent thoughts. Alexander Solzhenitsyn—whose talents should have made him a most respected son of "Mother Russia"—suffered the horrors of the Gulag system. Unlike other, weaker prisoners, he survived to describe the horrendous conditions under forced labor: Hard work in the depth of winter with inadequate clothing, stale food, 16 hours days. This is more than a story; it is a vision of hell. Considering the depth of information we have now concerning slave labor, the situation in the Soviet Union has apparently not improved in the last 50 years.

It is with great sorrow that we as a free nation must view the suppression of worker's rights in Poland and the Soviet Union. A great nation should not fear an active, independent labor movement; rather, free labor unions are a source of internal vitality and a bulwark to protect individual rights and freedoms.●

● Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, the basic human rights of people throughout the world must be of concern to the United States. We cannot preach about freedom and democracy unless we are willing to live by it in both our own country and in the policies that we follow in our relationships with other nations.

Throughout the world people work in the expectation that their labor will produce a living wage—a wage which will provide for the worker and the families of workers. A primary way in which workers have been able to achieve a living wage is through organization and unity in dealing with employers. This is true in both rural and urban settings. It should not matter whether the work performed is in farming or manufacturing or the provision of a service. Workers should be able to organize to achieve that which they have been unsuccessful in achieving alone.

The control of workers to meet the needs of employers has long been a goal of those who do not necessarily care about their living conditions. In country after country we have seen that wealth is concentrated in the hands of a few while little is left over to pay workers. This has led to the organization of workers and the repression of those who dared to organize.

The rights of workers to organize to earn a decent living must be considered as basic human rights, for what is more basic than the right to feed one's self and one's family? Beyond this concern for the well-being of those who struggle in other lands, Americans have a very pragmatic reason for opposing the exploitation of workers elsewhere. When labor can be extracted from a subjugated population for wages that leave them in a state akin to slavery, that labor will be sought out by those who can make a bigger profit. The products produced can be sold at lower prices, depriving American workers of their jobs. This may be viewed as a form of sanitary slavery. Americans need not see the misery generated. Americans need not know that the children of workers in these other lands are not fed properly. Americans are shielded from the reality that the exploited foreign workers are not protected from industrial diseases and accidents. It is all very far away and it is ever so easy to be blind to the pain.

When do the conditions of foreign workers come to our attention? Generally, it is only when trouble is reported. When the news media tells us that there are food riots in the Dominican Republic, one can understand that the workers there simply do not have enough money to pay for food. Wages and prices simply do not match up to cover the most basic necessities.

I sincerely doubt that Americans would rush to buy foreign-made products if they were aware that the lower price is often paid for in human misery. They can only gain this understanding when the country involved permits access to this information. This is one reason why we must support efforts to organize and make conditions known as well as supporting the basic rights of free speech and press so that we can become aware of conditions and become a supportive force for the rights of workers everywhere.

Even as we commit ourselves to the right of people to earn a living, we should not be sidetracked by considerations about our approval of the government structure in any particular country. The need to earn a living, to eat, to have shelter, et cetera, does not depend on the philosophy of a government. These are basic needs which must be met for all people. To support others in their struggle for a decent life is the imperative of a democracy.●

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, the facts about child employment in foreign countries would stagger most of our citizens. Worldwide, over 55 million children under the age of 15 currently work for a living, most in undeveloped regions. In some Asian countries as much as 7 percent of the population under the age of 15 works; in certain African nations, this figure dramatically rises to 20 percent. Some families, out of economic necessity, hand over or sell their children to employers. A vast majority of children are unpaid family workers, especially in agriculture.

For Americans, childhood is a time for carefree growth and play. We are deeply disturbed by reports of child bondage and exploitation. However, a distinction between child exploitation and child employment needs to be kept clear. Not all working children are exploited. A useful and productive occupation can be a desirable element in daily life, even for children. Yet the exploitation of these children does occur. The abuse and misuse of child labor constitutes perhaps one of the most shocking and distasteful violations of international labor rights. They are very often given inadequate compensation for their tasks, and can be subjected to hazardous and unhealthy working conditions.

In India over 20,000 children labor in match factories for 16 hours a day, starting at 3 a.m. And in Thailand, professionally operated markets buy and sell thousands of children each year to factories, massage parlors, and brothels. Most of the children sold are young girls, aged 10 to 14, who bring a mere $20 to $100. Some of these girls will go on to work from 6 a.m. to 9 p.m. in unregistered factories with no ventilation. After their day of breathing lint filled air, being deafened by machine noise, they will be locked in the factory storeroom.

Some Thai children work in battery factories filling batteries, never comprehending the danger of the chemicals they handle. They are given no masks or protective clothing, and because of this, many will suffer lung ailments or even paralysis from the debilitating effects of battery fluid.

The children undeniably suffer from their exploitation in the labor market. Clear and written contracts, proper feeding programs, and established rest times or holidays are virtually nonexistent. Yet the children are not the only ones who suffer. Child labor prevents continuing educational training. No modern economy could achieve full growth without an adequate system of education to train their youth, a most valuable national asset. The whole nation, and the national and international economy, suffer.

To be able to propose solutions, we must first examine and understand the reasons children continue to work in abominable conditions such as the ones described. Economic hardship and differing social perceptions are at the heart of this question.

First, extensive poverty often necessitates full or part-time employment of children. Incomes from child labor can contribute substantially to family income. When a child earns 20 to 25 percent of a family's total income, and that family lives on the edge of starvation, child labor becomes an economic imperative.

Also, there is a lack of resources to enforce child labor regulations. Labor inspection facilities are often understaffed, underfunded, and very susceptible to bribery and corruption. Much of the flagrant violation of existing law occurs in the informal urban sector, often out of reach of legislation and labor inspection services.

Third, the general public in many foreign countries remains ignorant of the implications of poor working and living conditions for child development. Because of their squalid, poverty-stricken environment, the appalling factory conditions and harsh treatment of children seem the unavoidable norm.

Finally, many developing countries take child labor for granted. For many countries child employment has been a socially and culturally acceptable occurnce, as it was in our country during the 19th century. Considering economic circumstances, putting children to work in the household or at farm duties has been not only acceptable, but commendable and honorable.

Simply passing regulations or minimum age requirements will not touch the root of the problem. Policies dealing with employment and poverty alleviation may help more than legislation concerning any specifics of child labor. A broad-based rural development program or a supervised cleanup of the informal urban sector would provide some hope for future long-term improvement. Educational expansion and labor-intensive public work schemes seem more workable than an outright ban on child labor.

Action to improve the working conditions of children is the immediate first step. Welfare services, minimum levels of education, and health protection should be available to all children. Effective enforcement of existing provisions would greatly improve all aspects of the child labor situation. Finally, countries should review existing standards, particularly those concerning hazardous activities, length of working day, and weekly rest and holidays. Mr. Speaker, we owe it to the children of the world, and to ourselves.●

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to join my colleagues in this special order on international labor rights and make some remarks concerning international child labor abuses and labor rights conditions in Poland.

As we speak here today, Mr. Speaker, millions of children throughout the world—many below the age of 10—are working in fields, streets, and factories throughout Latin America, Africa, Southern Europe, and Asia. Instead of getting an education and preparing themselves to assume responsibility in this world, millions of children are being abused and exploited, their potential wasted and aspirations lost. The most conservative estimates place their number at 55 million and it is generally agreed that this number is growing and will continue to grow as the number of children is these regions continues to climb.

Agricultural work is by far the most frequent area of child labor abuse, although one must not minimize the plight of millions of children in urban areas throughout the world who are forced to work in factories and on the streets. These children are forced to work under conditions which endanger their health, physical and mental development. So many of these children must endure unhealthy and unsafe working conditions, they must work without any type of written contract or agreement, without any type of nutrition program, and they work for paltry sums at best. In most instances these children have no choice but to work—for many of them it is either work or watch themselves and their families starve to death.

The future of the countries in these regions depends heavily upon the development and education of their youth. Yet because of the overwhelming poverty, unemployment, and economic underdevelopment in these regions, these countries use up and abuse their most precious and vital resource. While I recognize that alleviating the economic problems in these countries would lead to a significnat reduction in child labor abuses, the problem of child labor abuse is presently of such growing magnitude that positive action must be taken now.

This special order is a step in the right direction. We must work to bring not only national attention on this problem but international attention as well. By joining together in various forums such as these, all concerned parties throughout the world can collectively urge national governments in Latin America, Africa, Southern Europe and Asia, to adopt international labor conventions on minimum age for admission to employment where this has not been done and, where it has been done, to review existing legal standards on minimum age for admission to employment with the aim of significantly reducing incidences of child labor abuses. Hopefully in those countries where child labor abuses are the most prevalent, governments will be encouraged to adopt and strictly enforce child labor laws and regulations—including the improvement of existing labor conditions and educational programs. Such action would be a positive step in establishing norms and procedures to deal with child labor abuse and afford millions of children the right to develop their minds and bodies to benefit the growth and development of their countries. Let there be no mistake, this problem will not disappear over-night and it will be with us for a long time. That is why we must act now and do what we can to take the initial steps that are necessary to solve this disturbing problem that threatens the future development of many part of the world.

In addressing the issue of international labor rights my thoughts immediately turn to Poland, a country that in the summer of 1980, provided Eastern Europe with a ray of hope for the future of labor rights and human rights. In August 1980, Poland saw the rise of Solidarity, a national, social, and trade union movement uniting all Poles—even in the wake of the repressive rule of the Jaruzelski regime. The birth of Solidarity provided the Polish people with real hope for meaningful change toward a freer Poland. It gave the Polish people reason to have hope that they could live a life of dignity, one where their basic human rights would be respected and upheld. This monumental worker movement sought initially to change Poland's labor practices to give workers the basic rights and freedoms enjoyed by workers in democratic lands. Soon Solidarity began to encompass more than just workers, it became a social and national symbol for true change toward democrary in Poland and away from the oppressiveness and slavery of Soviet-sponsored communism. At the height of Solidarity's influence and power the Polish Government, with the support of the Soviet Union, decided to crush Solidarity in December 1981. With the imposition of martial law the Polish rulers had hoped to crush Solidarity and all independent labor associations.

Despite the brutality and oppressiveness of martial law and the official banning of Solidarity and all independent trade unions, the spirit of the movement lived on. Many workers were beaten, imprisoned, and detained by the Government during martial law. Some lost their lives in the struggle for freedom and worker's rights. Although the Polish Government has lifted martial law and recently granted amnesty to most former Solidarity activists and dissidents, they still refuse to allow the existence of Solidarity or any other independent trade unions. The workers of Poland have no legal vehicle to independently represent their interests and rights. In the absence of any legal form of representation Polish workers continue to be exploited and absued by a government that refuses to respect even the most basic of human rights. Many workers meet underground to keep alive the spirit of Solidarity and there is still hope among the Polish people that the hopes and aspirations raised by the birth of Solidarity will still someday be realized.

We, here in the United States and throughout the free world, must continue to express our concern for, and solidarity with, the workers of Poland and we must continue to speak out against the violations of labor rights by the Polish Government. We must never remain silent in the face of such injustice and we must remain ever vigilant in our support for the aspirations of the Polish people to live in a free society.●

● Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to take part in this special order on international labor rights; it is an important issue and I am grateful to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] for having taken the lead on this. We should all be concerned with international labor rights, not only because this country has traditionally made respect for human rights a pillar of our foreign policy, but also because we live in a world market and undermining of workers rights elsewhere inevitably has an adverse impact on workers in this country. The issues of international labor rights should be an integral part of the continuing discussion in this country over unfair foreign competitive practices.

Free trade unions find themselves under assault throughout the world. Undemocratic regimes—both leftist and rightist—correctly see free trade unions as a threat; they are a check against the asserting of unlimited state power. We are all familiar with the spectacle of the Polish Government attempting to squash the Solidarity movement. The Polish people seek an independent labor movement as a first step towards regaining control over their own institutions. This ambition hs only been frustated by the repressive application of force by the authorities, as well as the threat of force from the Soviet Union.

A report recently issued by the Committee in Support of Solidarity in New York documents the extensive violations of human rights which have been generated by the anti-Solidarity campaign. The leadership of the free trade union movement have been targetted; many of them have been murdered. The Government speaks of "unknown assailants" and "Mysterious disappearances," but its own complicity is patently obvious. And of course thousands have been detained as political prisoners.

I would like to commend the AFL-CIO for the excellent work they have done in publicizing the repression of the free trade union movement around the world. In addition to participating in the Committee in Support of Solidarity, they have brought to public attention the situation in Nicaragua, where the Sandinistas are seeking to stamp out independence in the labor movement.

The AFL-CIO for decades supported the struggle against Somoza, and was the only organization to boycott Somoza's merchant shipping at the request of the CUS, its Nicaraguan counterpart. Now the Nicaraguan Government has attempted to set up a "loyal" trade union movement, the CST. Since then the CUS, and another free trade union, the CNT, have faced a massive effort to absorb them into the official movement. The free trade union movement has struggled to maintain itself, but the cost has been high. Most recently the Government jailed seven dockworker union leaders for recommending that their union rejoin the CUS.

The repression of free labor unions, as I said before, is a feature common to dictatorships on both ends of the spectrum. It is a striking feature of life in South Korea, one of our closest allies and largest trading partners. Under the Park regime, labor union activity was restricted, but union membership continued to grow. Under the Chun regime membership has dropped sharply, as unions were forced to expell politically active members, and as unions were dissolved by the Government.

New laws which have been enacted since the 1980 coup have fragmented unions into units for each factory—thus making coordinate action more difficult—have made it a requirement that 30 members per site are needed before a union can be formed (most factories have less than 30); have prohibited third party participation in the movement—thus cutting the movement off from other democratic forces in society—have defined broad sectors of the economy as "off-limits" to unionization; have restricted the right of unions to publicize their demands; and have proscribed severe punishments for any infractions of these regulations.

The purpose of this is to prevent the development of any organized labor movement which might provide a vehicle for the democratic aspirations of the Korean people. And one result of this repressive campaign has been a steady decline in real wages, a decline which has an obvious impact on labor in this country.

It is not surprising, Mr. Speaker, that the labor movement in this country has taken such an active role in promoting human rights as the basis of our foreign policy. The worker's movement understands, from the bitter experience of their colleagues abroad, that labor rights are necessary to free institutions, and that an attack on labor anywhere is an attack on labor everywhere.●

● Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the gentleman from Ohio for organizing this special order. He has brought to our attention a problem which is often overlooked, that of rights afforded to labor groups in other countries. As my colleagues are aware, numerous nations do not accord their workers the basic labor protections that Americans enjoy. By instituting strict state control of unions and severely restricting the right to bargain and strike, some nations both violate basic human rights and are able to gain an unfair competitive advantage.

At a time when we are struggling to halt the decline of American basic industries and guarantee fair treatment for American goods marketed abroad, it is important to note how our friends and adversaries treat their workers. All of us are aware of the most egregious examples, like that of Poland, but this evening I would like to enter into the RECORD a summary of labor conditions in the Philippines. Specifically, this report considers the treatment of labor union leaders and members during the period of martial law (1975-81) and the 3 years since martial law was lifted. As recently as last month, 2 workers were killed and 37 wounded in an altercation between police and striking textile workers in Manila. While President Marcos alleges that such labor unrest is caused by outside agitation, it seems more likely that his curbs on labor rights and his economic and political policies are the source of the discontent. The summary follows:

LABOR RIGHTS IN THE PHILIPPINES

After the imposition of martial law in September 1972, many trade union leaders were arrested. Proclamation 1081, declaring martial law, cited labor organizations as one element in the alleged conspiracy which was said to justify the state of martial law. One of the first orders issued after the proclamation of martial law, General Order No. 5, banned strikes in industries deemed vital to national security. Anyone violating this order was to be "arrested and held for the duration of the national emergency."

A series of orders and decrees, including the introduction of a new labor code, issued subsequently, curtailed a number of rights and privileges of workers. Under the new labor code, trade union activities were to be restructured, with one union representing one industry and one confederation, the Trade Union Confederation of the Philippines (TUCP), acting as the voice of labor in tripartite conferences with management and government. In November 1975, following a strike and sit-in at La Tondena distillery in Manila, President Marcos issued Presidential Decree 823, which forbade all strikes, picketing and lockouts and prohibited the participation of aliens in trade union activities.

Following the lifting of martial law in January 1981, the right to strike was formally restored. Under legislation which came into effect in August 1981, however, the Minister of Labor and Employment may assume jurisdiction or decide on any strike which could adversely affect "the national interest," which is very broadly defined. In practice, this and other restrictive clauses severely limit the right to strike.

Neither did killings of labor leaders stop after martial law. While union leaders in urban areas have faced arrest, torture, imprisonment or, in some instances, have "disappeared," peasants and rural workers engaged in labor protests have been particularly vulnerable to such violations of human rights. For example:

On April 22, 1981, Epifanio Puebla disappeared. He was a tractor driver on the South Davao Development Co. estate who led a strike on the estate earlier that month.

On August 3, 1981, labor organizer Felix Occido was arrested, beaten and tortured. About a week later he disappeared.

On November 13, 1981, Ricardo Nolasco, a regional vice president of the United Lumber and General Workers Union of the Philippines was arrested, blindfolded, beaten, stripped naked and interrogated. As in most similar cases, no investigation has been made to punish those military personnel found responsible.

In August of 1982, repression against labor intensified. On August 13, 1982, Felixberto Olalia, president of the 350,00 strong KMU labor federation, was arrested. Five days later, Crispin Beltran, the vice president of KMU and to KMU lawyers were arrested. Between August 28 and September 2, more than 30 other labor leaders were thrown in jail.

Arrests and disappearances have continued in the first half of 1983. Beyond these occurences, in May 1983, the New York Times obtained a secret decree (Presidential Decree 1834) issued by President Marcos in 1981 which imposed the death penalty on anyone who organizes a rally intended to destabilize the government or erode "public loyalty." The range of crimes for which the law decrees capital punishment includes labor pickets that are deemed seditious.

Other repressive Presidential Decrees:

P.D. 1835—Revised Anti-Subversion Act which expands, under a vaguely-defined definition, acts of "subversiuon".

P.D. 1836—Relating to the arbitrary power of arrest.

P.D. 1877 and 1877-A—Relating to the new "Presidential Detention Action" a nonjudicial, arbitrary authority to arrest suspects and to detain them indefinitely without trial.

P.D. 449 (The Marcos Labor Code) provides:

1. No strikes permitted in "vital industries".

2. Prohibits collection of strike funds.

3. Restricts right to organize by decreeing the concept of "one union-one industry".

4. Unfair labor practice and union-busting were categorized merely as "administrative cases".

B.P. 130 (Legislation passed by the Marcos National Assembly or Batasang Pambansa)

1. For a strike to be "proper and legal," a 2/3 vote of members who are in favor is required.

2. Officers and members of a union shall be dismissed if they participated in a strike which is not "proper and legal".

3. Only a recognized union has the right to strike.

B.P. 227—Provides that in case of a strike, production and distribution of products by the struck-bound firm will not be stopped by the strike!

It also provides:

1. Free ingress-egress, allowing free entrance and exit of products in the struck-bound company.

2. The issuance of an injunction if the strike adversely affects the "national interest".

We have provided generous amounts of aid to the Philippines because that nation is a friend with an understanding of the principles of freedom and democracy. Unfortunately, these principles are not always observed. If we are to promote broad-based development in the Third World, we must export democratic values along with weapons and loans. If we are to compete fairly against foreign businesses, we must start from a position where foreign workers are afforded the same protections and rights given our workers. I hope that my colleagues will join me in continuing to support the rights of foreign workers so as to defend our own gains at home and guarantee human rights around the world.

MESSENGERS OF PEACE OR FORCE?

Lotus, maker of the expensive Nike Shoes, became another scene of unrest at the BEPZ when Philippine Constabulary and Zone Police attacked the picketline of the striking workers to pave way for the Korean owners, Mr. Jookim and Bok Lee, to ship out products from the factory last June 8. The 800 Lotus workers went on strike last May 28 at the same time the third sympathy strike in BEPZ erupted. Lotus workers (80% female and 20% male struck to protest the management's non-recognition of their new union's affiliation to the Association of Democratic Labor Organization and the illegal dismissal of 15 active unionists. The harassments of workers by the military has become an automatic procedure at the BEPZ, that despite government's promises to stop it, police brutality continues.

MANAGEMENT'S CONSTANT REFUSAL TO NEGOTIATE CAUSES LABOR TROUBLE

Some 120 workers belonging to the Fair Center Employees Union (FCEU) launched a strike on May 21 when the Young-controlled management of Fair Center Department Store consistently refused to appear in conciliation talks.

"Since the union filed a notice of strike on March 16, the management has not appeared in conciliation meetings or made alibis for the postponement of negotiations," claimed one striker.

It was learned that one of the issues which triggered the strike is the management's violation of Wage Order (W.O.) No. 1. According to the provisions of the Implementing Rules of W.O. No. 1, Sec. 8 the additional P2 allowance should not be integrated into the CBA concluded between Jan. 1 and March 22, 1981. Though the CBA and FCEU ended in June 1, 1982, the management insisted in integrating the P2 increase in the cost of living allowance (COLA).

Moreover, the increase in basic pay as granted by W.O. No. 2 (P18 plus P1) and W.O. No. 3 (P19 plus P2) have not been given to the workers.

Another issue is the non-payment of holiday allowances. According to the Implementing Rules of the Bureau of Working Conditions of the Labor Ministry, every worker should get complete COLA on holidays.

This means that the daily equivalent of the monthly COLA given under Presidential Decrees (PDs) 1614, 1634 and 1713 (P8.32) and the daily COLA provided for by PD 1678 and W.O. Nos. 1, 2 and 3 which total P11.00 should all be given on holidays, whether or not the worker served during those days. Fair Center workers receive only a total of P7 on holidays.

On top of these, the management dismissed and sued three union officials and four members for alleged theft. The union leader contended, however, that it was not the non-union members who committed the offense. The management put the blame to the militant union even as the trouble had been settled, said the union president.

The management led the 100-plus apprentices in trying to penetrate the peaceful picketline during the first day of strike. The attempt, however, was foiled by the strikers. Since then, the owner has not attempted to break the picketline again.

The last conciliation meeting set in May 31 was postponed anew due to the absence of management representatives. It was learned also that the management is willing to reinstate the dismissed union workers except the union president.

Apparently, the union has not accepted the management's offer as they have been on strike for the past four weeks.

PHILIPPINE LABOR: FACING UP TO UNPRECEDENTED CHALLENGES

(By Eusebio Ricarte)

The recent violence-marred strikes at Balanced Foods Corp. and Foamtex Industries highlight the tough challenges the labor movement faces for the rest of 1984.

The labor dispute at the toyo and patis factory in Novaliches, Quezon City, ironically otherwise known as Pinakamasarap Corp., stemmed from a retrenchment program implemented by company management. The Foamtex dispute, on the other hand, involved alleged attempts of the firm's owners to bust the recently-formed union by dismissing over 30 union officers and members. In both cases, the government intervened in favor of management.

At Balanced Foods, the workers were ordered to call off their strike and to return to work by virtue of an order by Labor Minister Blas F. Ople. The labor dispute was certified as a case that "involves the national interest" and was passed on to the National Labor Relations Commission (NLRC) for compulsory arbitration. At Foamtex, NLRC issued an injunction ordering the workers to allow management "free ingress to and egress from" the company premises. In both cases, the police and military broke the picketlines to implement these orders. At Foamtex, two strikers were shot dead allegedly by the police.

These incidents illustrate two ominous trends.

First, the country's economic crisis is worsening and is expected to take an even bigger toll on employment than it already has. This may lead to a full-scale assault on labor's hard-won gains, or whatever remains of them, in terms of collective bargaining rights, wages, working conditions and fringe benefits.

Second, the government has taken on a tougher stance towards militant trade unionism, which hasn't been hospitable to begin with.

In response to these trends, some 37 federations and national unions recently formed a coalition, the Pambansang Koalisyon ng Manggagawa Laban sa Kahirapan or PKMK, which, a few days after it was organized, immediately spearheaded a number of mass actions aimed mainly at countering police intervention at the picketlines. It has also initiated a series of dialogues with labor ministry officials for this purpose.

PKMK's larger objectives—as its name implies—however include broader action to counteract the pauperization of the working class due to the current economic crisis.

The formation of such a coalition was apparently prompted by a basic realization that trade union action at the level of individual companies will be grossly inadequate to cope with the unprecedented difficulties facing the labor sector. In fact, the present crisis stresses more emphatically than ever the need for working class participation in a popular movement for fundamental economic and political changes.

That need is clearly being recognized: in its May Day protest actions, the PKMK called on workers not only to fight the suppression of strikes, but also to boycott the Batasang Pambansa polls.

The present crisis gives the trade union movement no other recourse than broad collective action.

Take, for example, the problem of mass layoffs. The proximate cause is of course the country's foreign debt crisis. Unable to pay off maturing loans, the government has been forced to declare a moratorium on loan principal repayments. At the same time, it has been negotiating for a massive rescheduling of outstanding debts, i.e., converting about $10 billion out of the Philippines' total $25 billion foreign debt into longer-term loans.

Normal trade financing moreover has ground to a halt. Local firms, particularly import-dependent manufacturing companies, are unable to import their usual volumes of needed production inputs. As a result, many firms since October last year have been operating at about their normal rates, according to officials of the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

Correspondingly, the toll on employment, particularly in the manufacturing sector in Metro Manila, has been severe. Incomplete reports of the labor ministry say the number of temporary and permanent layoffs from October 1983 to March 1984 had reached 75,000.

The figures bear out the observation that the debt crisis had much to do with this: layoffs in the last quarter of 1983 (about 41,400) exceeded by some 7,700 the layoffs in the previous quarters of the year. The number of reported layoffs since January has, however, apparently been declining (about 35,000 layoffs were tallied in this period). But this is at least partly due to the recent boom in the blackmarket trade for imported inputs that has kept industry going.

Still, that provides scant comfort—because the much-touted "cure," debt rescheduling, to the debt crisis may be even worse than the disease.

For this bail-out entails a package of severe austerity measures, which include:

Devaluation. From the present offical rate of P14 to $1, the peso-dollar is expected to jump to anywhere from P18-P22 to $1.

Tighter Credit. The Central Bank is requiring commercial banks to increase the amount of money deposited with the CB as reserves. This reserve requirement had been hiked from 18% in June 1983 to 24% in April. This means that local businesses, except for favored export and other firms, will have far less credit for their needs.

More Taxes. A recent example is the increase of taxes on imports from 5% to 8%. The idea is to reduce the government budget deficit to about P7 billion this year compared to over P10 billion the two prior years.

These measures are expected to be enforced after the May polls. And the consequences are predictably chilling:

Staring with oil, prices of a broad range of goods will shoot up.

Businesses, particularly small and medium enterprises, will become even more cash-strapped.

With consumers' incomes slashed by inflation, markets for many goods will weaken.

The net result is a higher rate of business failures and more layoffs.

From a trade union viewpoint, worsening unemployment brings with it a host of problems. It penalizes not only those who lose their jobs, but also those who hold on to theirs.

Massive unemployment weakens labor's bargaining position and quickly leads to widespread deterioration of working conditions, particularly in the smaller firms.

Violations of minimum wages and other labor standards, already quite common, are likely to become even more rampant. Union organizing is expected to become even tougher given the ever-present threat of retrenchments.

These two problems, which are common in the growing number of companies, have given way to the practice of hiring "agency employes" to replace regular employes. However, data on this matter are sorely lacking. But labor groups have noted with increasing alarm that this management tactic is fast catching on in many companies. After all, agency employees get lower pay, are not entitled to company benefits, and cannot join labor unions.

In a number of big food manufacturing firms, for example, the number of agency employees outnumbers regular workers by over two to one. These agency employees perform not only janitorial, security, clerical and messengerial functions, but are also found in the production departments.

With business conditions going from bad to worse, this anti-union tactic is likely to proliferate.

The employers, on the other hand, are setting into motion plans to change labor laws in ways that would virtually turn the clock back for labor. For one, the Employers Confederation of the Philippines is proposing that strikes be allowed only during the 60-days before the expiration of an existing collective bargaining agreement.

For another, ECOP wants to scrap the Eight-Hour Workng Day law so that employers can require employees to work beyond eight hours a day without paying overtime premiums so long as the number of work hours don't exceed 48 hours a week.

Individual unions have begun to react to these menacing trends. In the first quarter of this year, the labor ministry noted the rising incidence of labor disputes where retrenchments and layoffs are among the main issues.

Obviously, however, trade union action at the company level can only go so far.

The problem of mass layoffs, for example, is rooted in the neocolonial status of the country's economy, where local industry remains largely that of the knocked-down, assembly-plant variety, heavily dependent on imported equipment and supplies.

More immediately, the problem of mass layoffs is going to be worsened by the stiff conditions being imposed by the IMF as the price for debt rescheduling. These are plainly national policy issues and will have to be addressed through broad political action.

Nor is isolated trade union action likely to prove effective against the trend of violent suppression of strikes.

The get-tough policy on strikes is clearly part of the government's overall aim of containing the social unrest likely to be provoked by the severe austerity measures coming in the second half of the year.

On the labor scene, this policy of repression is enforced through Batas Pambansa Blg. 130 and 227, which have governed the conduct of strikes since the formal lifting of martial law in 1981.

The key instrument of control is the power granted the president and the labor minister by BP 130 to certify disputes for compulsory arbitration on the grounds of national interest. BP 227, on the other hand, effectively renders the picketline ineffective by recognizing management's right to free ingress and egress to and from the company premises during a work stoppage.

These anti-labor laws have given the police and military the legal pretext to step into labor disputes and break up strikes.

The PKMK has managed to win some concessions on this score through protect actions and dialogues with labor ministry officials. It has struck agreement with the labor ministry to refrain from issuing return-to-work orders and injunctions without first "consulting" with the affected unions.

Still, this is a fragile pact, that may not survive the next few months. Under such circumstances, the trade union movement faces an extremely complex task.

Given the hard times, there will be numerous cases wherein unions must strike well-chosen compromises in collective bargaining for the sake of keeping jobs.

At the same time, unions must keep pressing for higher wages and other urgent economic demands where feasible. They must also thwart employers' moves to take advantage of the situation to bust unions and impose intolerable working conditions. In some firms, for example, unions are increasingly resorting to such tactics as mass leaves, slowdowns and pickets to complement the option of formally declaring a strike.

Simultaneous trade union action is also called for. Strikes in key firms should be made rallying points for union and public support to improve the chances for success and to provide support in the event of strike-breaking by the police.

This has already been proven effective by the two rounds of sympathy strikes at Bataan Export Processing Zone in 1982 and 1983.

But, what is most important in the long-term is for larger sections of the trade union movement to take part in popular mass movements that advance the people's democratic and national intersts. There is need, at this very time when suppression is on the upswing, for a more determined campaign for the longstanding demand for the repeal of such oppressive laws as BP 130 and 227.

This will have to be part of the broader movement to defend civil liberties and restore democracy.

Labor groups will also have to consider possibilities for cooperating with their employers on specific issues.

In the sugar industry, for example, mill workers in Luzon have joined mill owners and planters in attaching the National Sugar Trading Corp.'s monopoly of sugar trading. The nature of such alliances may not however guarantee the consolidation/protection of workers' interest. It is more of a tribute to the complexity of the present situation that such possibilities must be contemplated, examined.

On top of this, workers must take up the nationalist cause of opposing the policies and programs being imposed by the IMF and the foreign banks and governments such as those of the United States and Japan.

The current crisis provides an unprededented opportunity for a greater part of the labor movement to rise above the level of rice-and-fish unionism.

"THINGS ARE SIMMERING NOW" FOR THE PHILIPPINES

(By Steve Lohr)

MANILA, July 18.—Soon after 7 A.M. each day, Cabinet ministers, politicians, corporate executives and newspaper columnists begin filing into the coffee shop of the Hotel Inter-Continental here.

Seated in wicker chairs around a few circular tables, they discuss yesterday's news and today's gossip. This highpowered kaffeeklatsch is called the 365 Club, so named for the regularity of its sessions. Its entirely informal deliberations are generally lively, but recently the decibel level has risen spirited.

"We are heading for a confluence of important events" in the Philippines, Blas F. Ople, the Minister of Labor, explained during a pause in the oratorical fray the other morning. "Things are simmering now."

What he was referring to is the belief here that, over the next several weeks, decisions will be made and events will unfold that will have lasting effects on the poltical and economic course of the nation.

Among them: The board investigating the assassination last Aug. 21 of the opposition leader Benigno S. Aquino Jr. is expected to issue its findings, and important negotiations with the International Monetary Fund are said to be in their final stages.

NEW ASSEMBLY TO CONVENE

Next Monday the new National Assembly will begin its session, with both the strengthened opposition and some members of the ruling party determined to legislate restrictions on the powers of President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

And the frequency of political demonstrations is expected to increase culminating in huge rallies on Aug. 21, the first anniversary of Mr. Aquino's death.

There have been violent clashes recently between demonstrators and the police, which the Government asserts have been provoked by Communists who it says have infiltrated the student and labor ranks.

On July 6 the police used tear gas and truncheons to disperse students protesting tuition fees, inflation, unemployment and the Government's economic policies. Three days later riot policemen fired on textile workers striking for higher wages and at least 10 people suffered gunshot wounds.

The most remarkable thing about the Aquino inquiry is that after eight months, 120 hearings and testimony from 186 witnesses, there is still no conclusive proof of who shot Mr. Aquino as he was descending from the plane that had brought him from self-exile in the United States, or precisely where the shot came from.

The Government maintains that the assassin was Rolando Galman, a criminal who it says was hired by Communists. Many Filipinos doubt the Government version and believe that the military killed Mr. Aquino, possibly on orders from high-ranking officials. The evidence to support either view seems circumstantial and several witnesses gave contradictory testimony. The panel said Tuesday that the investigation would continue byond Aug. 21, the date the board had earlier set as its target for issuing a final report.

The reaction to the board's ruling will depend partly on the public perception of its independence.

One high-ranking official suggests that the commission has three options. It can, he says, support the military version of the killing; find criminal negligence on the part of the security forces while ignoring the nettlesome issue of who killed Mr. Aquino, or rule that the opposition leader was murdered as a result of a "military conspiracy," without pointing toward Mr. Marcos or his close associates.

Any of the three findings, the official notes, will elicit public protest. "It's a no-win situation for the Government," he said.

The economy may well be the most serious problem for Mr. Marcos' Government, and the one with the most severe political consequences. To get approval for a $650 million standby credit and then reschedule much of its $25.6 billion in loans from private banks, the Philippine Government must convince the International Monetary Fund that it is committed to the harsh measures required to live within its means.

The details of that austerity package will be the foundation of the nation's economic policy for the next few years. However, there is genuine worry here that a formula to please Western bankers now might invite political instability later.

"The I.M.F. has one solution for all countries with debt problems—cut you off at the knees," said Mr. Ople.

In the new National Assembly, the opponents of Mr. Marcos will have about 70 of the 183 elected seats compared with 13 seats in the former house. A couple of races in the May 14 elections remain contested.

"But Marcos' big problem is not going to be with the opposition, but with his own party," said Jaime Ongpin, a corporate executive who is one of the President's most persistent and articulate critics.

Manuel Collantes, an Assemblyman of the New Society Movement, the governing party, is not shy about disagreeing publicly with Mr. Marcos on occasion. Like several other members of the party, Mr. Collantes is at odds with the President over the central issue of Mr. Marcos' decree-making powers, which allow him to bypass the Assembly and make his own laws.

Mr. Collantes said he thought the President should be granted this power only with the approval of the Assembly in emergency situations.

Mr. Ongpin contends that the views of such politicians as Mr. Collantes demonstrate that Mr. Marcos' control over political life in the Philippines is waning.

Noting that the Assembly members have six-year terms while the President has less than three years left in his term, Mr. Ongpin said, "No politician in his right mind would wholly cast his lot with a sinking ship."●

● Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, with great pride I rise today in staunch support of the rights of working men and women throughout the world in their struggle for fairness, justice, and human dignity. Dictatorships on both extremes of the political spectrum are today systematically engaging in reprehensible violations of workers' rights to organize and petition for equitable wages and humane working conditions. From Central America to Eastern Europe, trade unions—the organizations through which workers can band together and claim what is rightfully theirs—are being repressed. The United States must make clear to all nations that we stand squarely with workers who ask that their rights be respected.

For the remainder of my time, I would like to focus on the plight of workers in the country from which my grandparents emigrated to come to America—Poland. On December 13, 1981, the Government of Poland suspended the activities of all existing trade unions, including the Solidarity Union led by Lech Walesa, on the basis of a martial law decree. Although it was claimed that Solidarity activity was only to be suspended, from the very beginning of martial law in Poland it was clear that the Polish Government was set on a course of mass and diverse repressive actions aimed at breaking the structure and reversing the gains of Solidarity.

The Polish Army was brought out unto the streets along with armoured units. At the many work places that were militarized, absence from work was made punishable with the same sentence as that for military desertion. Solidarity activists were interned en masse. People were dismissed from work for union activities. Many were arrested and tried for defending union rights. Some of those arrested were beaten and ill treated. Peaceful demonstrators were dispersed with the use of force. The Polish media abused and slandered Solidarity leaders. The Polish Government spared few pains in its attempts to squelch the Solidarity movement and what it represented to Polish workers—the hope of workers to live in a democracy where each individual could control their own destiny.

Yet, despite the relentless harassment by the Polish Government, Solidarity carries on. A vigorous underground press functions. Dues are collected. An underground radio operates. Union leader Lech Walesa's stature as a national hero is as great as ever. As Gzeslaw Milosz, a world-renowned Polish poet-in-exile wrote on the op-ed page of the New York Times.

The Polish people have been defeated many times, and this time (referring to the suppression of Solidarity) they are defeated in a particularly perfidious game. But as I know history, I do not believe that the democratic movement in Eastern Europe, of which Solidarity became the spearhead, is a transitory phenomenon. On the contrary, its open or latent presence will prove more durable that all the juntas of our century together.

This past June, the International Labor Office of the United Nations issued a report which charged the Government of Poland with denying workers their basic rights and called for an end of the suppression of the free trade union movement and its leaders. Specifically, the International Labor Office found that the Polish Government interferred with workers' freedom of association and workers' freedom to organize and bargain collectively. Poland, by being a cosignator of International Labor Office conventions, has agreed to recognize both these rights. A perusal of the International Labor Office report will show that although martial law in Poland has been lifted, the violations of workers' rights continue. It should be the goal of U.S. policy to bring about a change in this unacceptable situation.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter into the RECORD an interview with Lech Walesa published in the Journal of the International Union of Bricklayers & Allied Craftsmen.

POLISH LABOR LEADER CALLS FOR SOLIDARITY

(Editor's note: The following is excerpted from an interview with Polish labor leader Lech Walesa conducted by Free Labor World, the publication of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions. The AFL-CIO is a member of the ICFTU. BAC Journal would like to point out the striking difference between conditions in Poland, where elections are phony and nothing more than a ratification of candidates selected by the Communist Party, and the wide open primary battle in the Democratic Party here in America. Walesa is correct in urging Polish workers to boycott the upcoming Polish elections, just as BAC is right in urging its members to fully participate in American elections where they really have a choice.)

FREE LABOUR WORLD. In your speech of acceptance of the Nobel Prize you spoke about a middle way, on the one hand avoiding violence, and on the other not yielding on Solidarnosc's basic demands. What state is the struggle of Solidarnosc in today and what is the strength of Solidarnosc?

LECH WALESA. After 13 December (1981—i.e., the declaration of martial law—Ed.) we had a bit of mess in our movement, an organisational mess. To sort out this mess, we could have started at the top of the movement, but we had decided to start at the bottom. Our task was to get people who had lost hope to come up with new initiatives. And probably this approach was going a bit slowly at first but right now we see that it is having an effect. The evidence of this fact is that recently we have had more and more arrests.

The method of acting was that individual people were trying to find each other, and now we see the initiatives coming up from the enterprise level. They all have some proposals for further struggle and programmes. The role of the activists is to pick up these programmes and initiatives and make them into a common programme.

At the top, it is a bit different. We still remain loyal to each other. At the head, I still remain, myself, with my closest group, the highest entity within the Union. And I try, together with my closest group, to act within a legal framework.

The TKK [the underground arm of Solidarnosc] serves us for a different type of activity, but there are no major differences between myself and the TKK. The TKK is a bit lower and it has the other groups which do what we can't do. Our aims are the same and there is no difference between us. It is still necessary for us to act in this way. I can't say out loud what I want to say on every matter. In such cases, there are others who can speak out. Our action within the enterprises is different. Of course, minor differences occur, but the trade union is democratic. And you must also remember that the authorities make our contacts very difficult. Today, these legally-acting groups, that is, acting within the legal framework, are much more numerous than the others. TKK is not growing in numbers, because the possibility of acting legally or semi-legally still exists. This does not mean that a reverse process is impossible. If the conditions for legal action become too difficult, we shall go over to the TKK way of acting.

We like this set-up. It is very useful for us. It has passed the test and we will continue this way of acting.

FLW. And communications and relations between the TKK and the leadership above ground—are they good?

WALESA. They are good enough. You must remember the conditions in which we live and which role we have to play. But, in general affairs, there are no differences. We are one. We do have discussions, of course. But that's normal.

FLW. When you drove away from church yesterday, in your minibus, immediately a police car came in front of you, and another behind you. Is that a fair sample of the conditions under which you work and live?

WALESA. Yes. Every Saturday and Sunday, I have at least seven police cars around.

I've got used to this—and it doesn't worry me. And I like to show this set-up, this situation to society at large. So sometimes I even drive around town in a motorcade with the police, just to show what the situation is like. Driving very slowly. Up to now, whenever I've really needed to lose my guardians, I have succeeded, but it must be very well organised. We are fairly well organised, and getting better. But our guardians are also better organised.

On weekdays, Monday to Friday, the protection is a bit lighter. But in the case of somebody important coming to Gdansk, the protection increases.

FLW. I understand that many people in Solidarnosc fear that the question of municipal elections might lead to an even further tightening of the repression. Do you share this view?

WALESA. I can only repeat what I always say; I cannot tell anybody not to vote. For myself, I will not vote. This is sufficient for me to be me understood.

We always say that we are here to solve problems. You should remember that the stronger the terror is, the stronger is the reflection of this in the society. The angle of refraction is the same as the angle of incidence.

FLW. Could we maybe hear from you what main economic reforms are necessary (in Poland)?

WALESA. We should take into consideration the conditions that we live in. We can't abandon the programme which was adopted at the Congress. But this programme should be put into order, in a way. In economic matters, I only signal concerns as a trade unionist, so that they can be more closely examined and we can learn self-government (self-management), which we are bound by circumstances to introduce.

You have to remember that, during these last 40 years of a different type of economy, people have grown accustomed to many things that they had never known, or had known differently, before. We have no private initiative, private enterprises. We haven't got managers who are educated to act in a different way. We also don't have rich people to buy enterprises. So, it's necessary for us to base ourselves on self-governing or self-managing enterprises. And we know that every enterprise is a bit different so, each of these enterprises must have different self-governing institutions. But after these 40 years, we see many faults in economic thinking and acting, and we can improve some of them by a self-governing way of acting. And we have many people who are well-educated and they will be in a position to lead this programme. My duty is just to strengthen this platform a bit and to let others put it in order.

FLW. You have had moral and other support from the trade union movement internationally. Has this support been useful? Has it been the right kind of support?

WALESA. In my mind, it is an event on a world scale. Much more has been done than we could have expected. So we are very happy about this support, and we ask everybody to keep on with it. As a matter of fact, all that we need now is perseverance. If we keep on, we shall win.

As far as we know, our authorities have been using an interesting argument. They have always repeated that there will be pluralism in trade union life in Poland by 1985. Perhaps you can find out because you have much better possibilities to do this. How many people from abroad, possibly even the Secretary-General of the United Nations, were convinced about the Polish authorities' wishes and by this argument, about the pluralism of the trade union movement in Poland? This is very important because we shouldn't give the Polish authorities an opportunity to withdraw from this argument. If we succeed in this, by next year, which is the first year of pluralism, they say, for trade union life, we can do many things, starting from 1985. And we should understand that this pluralism should be according to the Conventions of the International Labour Organisation. It should be pluralism in the spirit of the ILO.

FLW. This interview will be read by workers and their representatives in many parts of the world; have you any special message that you would like to give to them at this time from Poland?

WALESA. I will say what I always say—the world of labour has never gained anything for nothing. It must struggle for a better tomorrow. The 20th-21st century is a century of peaceful struggle. There should be the biggest possible solidarity amongst working people. The awareness of working people everywhere is much bigger, much wider than other people's, so they do not destroy what they build. And you must also remember that nowhere is so good that it couldn't be better. We should be reasonable and we should want better.

FWL. You mentioned the 20th centry and 21st century—would you position the final victory of Solidarnosc in the 20th or 21st century?

WALESA. It depends on ourselves—on each one of us. We must remember that we are sitting on a barrel of dynamite, so the world of labour must show more and more solidarity because people are weak and are weaker still if they act alone. The technical means are now so sophisticated that we should hold together even more. We should defend ourselves in evergrowing numbers. Years ago, it was sufficient for one individual enterprise to defend itself. Now, even one country is not able to defend itself. So the solidarity of world labour is even more useful and necessary than ever. We must find new solutions, a new means of solidarity, a new means of struggle. The old means are becoming obsolete. Even the typical strikes don't suit the present situation any more. So we must invent a new type of strike, to ensure that the goods are produced but that they are transferred to the proper places.●

● Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] for taking this special order on international labor rights.

Over the 4 years of the Reagan administration's tenure in office, we have seen an increasing reliance on military aid as the foundation of U.S. support for foreign governments, and a downplaying of U.S. commitments to basic human rights. In large measure this has happened because the President, in my judgment, persists in the misguided notion that all conflicts in developing countries, and particularly in Latin America, are the function of an ongoing East-West conflict.

If we are going to successfully promote stability and establish a strong foundation for democracy in developing nations, we are going to have to concentrate on the elimination of the political, social, and economic ills which afflict so many of those countries. Economic aid can do that. Yet our ability to provide financial aid is increasingly constrained by the huge budget deficits produced during the Reagan tenure in the White House.

The worldwide recession has hit developing countries hardest, but even we are not immune to the impact of recession in the developing world. Slowed growth in those countries has cost Americans exports, export-related jobs, lower income from U.S. investment overseas, and turmoil in the international financial system. We have a direct stake in the economic health of developing nations. In 1974–79, U.S. exports to developing countries grew at an annual rate of 6 percent. In 1980 U.S. investment in developing countries accounted for nearly 25 percent of all U.S. overseas investment, providing $11.7 billion in net income for the United States.

The world economic decline has led to stagnation in world trade and less demand for U.S. exports. In each of the past 3 years, U.S. exports have declined—adjusted for inflation. Exports of U.S. machinery and capital goods to Latin America fell 57 percent between 1981 and 1983. The decline has had a dramatic effect on U.S. employment, costing us nearly 1.5 million jobs from 1981 to 1983. Forty percent of those lost jobs were caused by the decline in exports to developing countries; 30 percent caused by the drop in exports to Latin America alone. It is abundantly clear that the economic health of the United States is very much affected by the economic well-being of developing nations.

Vigorous trade union activities in developing countries can and will play a vital part in the struggle for the foundation of democratic principles in those countries. Independent trade unions, free of interference from their government or their employers, are essential in the development of pluralistic societies. In addition, trade unions can help shape and carry out programs for economic and social development, help secure adequate income and adequate distribution of income, and preserve and protect basic human rights. This is pivotal if we are to see democracy flourish. As the Brandt Commission report, "The Report of the Independent Commission on International Development Issues" notes:

> Economic development will need to be accompanied by efforts to encourage people to organize themselves. (These people) will often be the guarantee of implementing reforms in many social and economic areas. Furthermore, such organizations can help in development activities, in mobilizing resources, particularly through self-help and public works projects, and in providing social services extension services, credit, draining and inputs on a group basis . . . In achieving the main objectives of development, no system lacking in genuine and full participation of the people will be fully satisfactory or truly effective.

This is a stark warning to countries which view outside insurgency as the main threat to democracy. It is clear to me that no amount of military aid is going to suffice to prop up governments which fail to respect the basic human rights of their peoples, and which seek to undermine respect for basic labor rights. Indeed, one can argue that revolutionary movements would find little support in countries whose governments are actively committed to human rights, and to the economic, social, and political well-being of the populace.

The U.S. policy, therefore, must seek to encourage respect for human rights, and to encourage the development of a free and vigorous program of workers' rights. Our aid should concentrate on programs which further that goal. In so doing, we will help stabilize the political situation in developing countries, and we will achieve the twin goals of reducing the demand for U.S. grant aid, while increasing the demand for U.S. exports for internal consumption. In this way, both we and the developing countries will benefit.

It is clearly in our interest to promote international worker rights for yet another reason. Few congressional districts in this country don't have industries which have been adversely affected by foreign imports. In many cases, American industry simply can't compete with cheap foreign labor, which also provides a strong incentive for American businesses to relocate overseas. In many cases the foreign products are products in "sweat shops" where workers, desperate for a meager source of income which means the difference between starvation and survival, work in appalling conditions for long hours for low pay. The promotion of international labor rights would help curb these abusive labor practices, and would, naturally, lead to an improvement in the wages paid to foreign workers. Such a development would improve their standard of living—easing political tensions—while decreasing the price differential between American and foreign-made products.

As the global economy becomes more and more interdependent, it is obvious that the health of the U.S. economy is linked directly to the political and economic health of developing nations. Vigorous American support for international labor rights will help improve the lot of American workers, and will help stabilize developing countries, eliminating many of the internal tensions which provide an opening for insurgency and which threaten global peace.●

NEW INDUCTEES TO NATIONAL BASEBALL HALL OF FAME

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT] is recognized for 60 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in this historic Chamber on this magnificent evening in August for three very important purposes: One, I wish to call to the attention of my colleagues, and all across America who are listening, a very important event that will take place in Cooperstown, NY, this Sunday, August 12, at 2:30.

On that day, in that beautiful community, there will be inducted into the National Baseball Hall of Fame five of baseball's greatest players in our history, Luis Aparicio, Don Drysdale, Harmon Killebrew, Rick Ferrell, and Harold "Pee Wee" Reese. What fond memories they bring to all of our hearts. That is the main purpose of this special order.

But second, I would like to encourage all to visit beautiful Cooperstown, NY, to do as millions of others have, make the pilgrimmage to the home of baseball to see the National Baseball Hall of Fame. Bring the family. It is a magnificent experience.

Third, Mr. Speaker, I would like to encourage all to support minor league baseball, because in the teams across the Nation, whether they be in North Carolina or in Illinois or Ohio or in my home town of Utica, where the Blue Sox last year captured the New York pen league championship, minor league baseball is the place where these youngsters are trained, where today we are seeing shortstops and catchers and outfielders and people who some day, just some day, might end up where Aparicio and Killebrew and all those other greats are, alongside the likenesses of Babe Ruth and Ty Cobb and Lou Gehrig and Stan Musial and Henry Aaron.

What is more American, Mr. Speaker, than baseball. It is the national pastime, the national game, and I am proud to call to my colleagues' attention the fact that we will have on this Sunday, August 12, five more inductees, five more who will be enshrined in that magnificent mecca for America's No. 1 sport.

Let me just tell you a little bit about these baseball greats.

Luis Aparicio, "the Venezuela Flash." Just consider some of these magnificent accomplishments. He tied the major league record for most consecutive years, 8, leading the league in fielding average as a shortstop, from 1959 through 1966. He holds the major league record for the most consecutive years, 6 straight, leading shortstops and assists. That was 1956 through 1961.

He holds the American League record for the most years, 5 consecutive, leading shortstops and games played. He also led in assists for the seventh time in 1968, to tie another major league mark. He established an American League record for highest fielding average by a shortstop in 1963. He led the American League shortstops in errors in 1956, as you might expect someone as great as this, who had such range, who all the time was chasing those balls hit his way, and most of the time, as his Gold Glove awards attest, he caught them. He did a magnificent job.

He was chosen the American League Rookie of the Year by both the Baseball Writers' Association and the Sporting News in 1956. He was named the shortstop on the Sporting News All Star American League Team in 1963, 1966, 1968, 1970, and 1972. He won Gold Glove awards as outstanding American League fielding shortstop nine times, 1958 through 1970.

He was chosen All Star Major League shortstop by the Association Press in 1970. He holds the following lifetime major league records for a shortstop: Most games, 2,581; most assists, 8,016; most chances accepted, 12,564; and most double plays, 1,553. Lifetime American League record holder for the most putouts, 4,548. That is a lot of putouts by a shortstop, Mr. Speaker.

What a distinguished career Luis Aparicio had. People from Chicago, Baltimore, and Boston who witnessed him playing with the Orioles and the White Sox—I think the White Sox obviously is where he spent most of his career, but he also played with the Red Sox, started out in Waterloo, along the way he played for Memphis. From 1954 through 1973, Luis Aparacio was one of the best in the business. Certainly he richly deserves the honor that will come his way this Sunday in Cooperstown, NY.

LUIS ERNESTO APARICIO

And how about Double D, Don Drysdale. Has there ever been in the history of baseball a pitcher who pitched as well and hit as well as Don Drysdale? I do not think so. Obviously the sportswriters do not, either.

He, along with Aparicio, will be honored this Sunday.

Drysdale, the alltime Dodger pitcher leader in seven categories, wins with 209, losses with 166. He played a lot and played very well. He pitched in 518 games, started 465 of them. He leads the Dodger hurlers through history with strikeouts, 2,486, and he has pitched 3,432 innings and had 49 shutouts.

Don Drysdale, old Double D, is fifth in complete games, with 167.

He was the National League strikeout champion three times, 1959, 1960, and 1962.

He played for the Dodgers from 1958 to 1969 and in 1962 he earned the Cy Young Award.

Mr. Speaker, Don Drysdale, what a career, nine times he was an all star, No. 10 on the alltime earned run averages at 2.95, established major league records for most consecutive shutout games won at six and most consecutive shutout innings at 58 and two-thirds in 1968.

He established a National League record for most seasons with 200 or more strikeouts, six times did Don Drysdale accomplish that feat.

He tied the National League record for most homeruns by a pitcher in a season of seven in 1958.

Can you imagine how many he would have hit had he been playing every single day, but he was too valuable a property on the pitching mound.

He tied the National League record for most shutout games won in a month, five in 1 month, in May of 1968.

He holds the Dodger record for most starts in season of 42 set in 1963 and duplicated in 1965. He led the National League in games started, 42 in 1965 and tied for the lead in shutouts in 1959.

He had his best year in 1962 when he was 25 and 9.

He won 23 games in 1965.

Don Drysdale, old Double D, ranks 11th on the alltime strikeout list and he is tied for 14th on the alltime shutout list among 71 pitchers in major league history with 200 or more wins.

Drysdale started out in 1954, the year I was a high school senior, playing for Bakersfield, CA. He wrapped up his career in 1969 with the Los Angeles Dodgers and in between, Mr. Speaker, he thrilled millions of Americans.

Don D, Double Drysdale.

DONALD SCOTT DRYSDALE (AIRDALE, THE BIG WARRIOR, BIG D, DOUBLE D)

Born July 23, 1936, at Van Nuys, CA, height, 6.06. Weight, 208. Threw and batted righthanded.

Established major league records for most consecutive shutout games won (6), May 14 through June 4, 1968, and most consecutive shutout innings (58), May 14 through June 8, 1968.

Tied following National League records: Most home runs by pitcher, season (7), 1958 and 1965; most shutout games won month (5), May, 1968.

Tied for lead in shutouts with 4 in 1959; had total of 154 hit batsmen in N. L.

Received Cy Young Award as outstanding major league pitcher, 1962.

Named Major League Pitcher of the Year by THE SPORTING NEWS, 1962.

Named as pitcher on THE SPORTING NEWS' All-Star National League Team, 1962.

Mr. BRITT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOEHLERT. I am glad to yield to my distinguished colleague from North Carolina.

Mr. BRITT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and commend the gentleman for this special order on a very special topic. I had the privilege of being with the gentleman from New York in his district out in Cooperstown visiting one of the most delightful small cities in this country and, of course, the home of the Baseball Hall of Fame, which I had the privilege of visiting.

I would like to take a moment to pay a special tribute to a special player, a player of great renown and ability from my home State of North Carolina, Enos "Country" Slaughter.

Enos Slaughter, of course, is a legend and those of us from North Carolina hope that some day soon that legend will be inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame.

I would like to mention a few of his particular accomplishments.

Enos Slaughter is one of the few lifetime 300 hitters who has not been voted into the Baseball Hall of Fame.

He had 2,383 career hits in a 19-year major league career, that was interrupted for 4 years by service in World War II. He played well over 2,000 games as an outfielder, primarily for the "Gas House Gang," the St. Louis Cardinals of the 1930's, 1940's, and 1950's.

Slaughter played in five World Series, two for the Cardinals, and three for the Yankees in the mid fifties.

He was a remarkably consistent player, known for his outstanding base running and outfield prowess. In 1949 Slaughter hit 0.336, and in 1946, he led the National League in RBI's with 130. He batted over 0.300 in 10 of his major league seasons.

Slaughter was involved in one of the most famous single plays in baseball history. In the seventh game of the 1946 World Series, the Cardinals were playing the Red Sox in St. Louis. In the bottom of the eighth inning, with the score tied 3 to 3, Slaughter led off with a single to left field. The next two Cardinals were retired. Cardinal outfielder Harry "The Hat" Walker then lined a single to left field. Running on the pitch, Slaughter scored from first base on Walker's single. It was one of the most astonishing base running plays of all times, as Red Sox shortstop Johhny Pesky was almost frozen, holding the ball over the cutoff man, as Slaughter rounded third and headed for home without breaking stride. This play was exemplary of the Gas House Gang style of baseball. This single play confirmed Slaughter's reputation as one of baseball's best base runners.

Slaughter earned his nickname. He was born on a farm near Roxboro, NC, on April 27, 1916, and he grew up as a farm boy. He was signed by the Cardinals while working at a textile mill in Durham in 1936. He played in the minor leagues for 2 years before making the St. Louis club in 1938. He served in the Pacific in World War II.

He was traded from the Cardinals to the Yankees in 1954, and distinguished himself in three World Series—1956, 1957, and 1958. In the 1956 World Series, then 40-years old, he hit 0.350.

Slaughter now lives on his farm near Roxboro in Person County, NC (Tim Valentine's District). He is still very active, cutting and splitting his own firewood and farming tobacco.

He is an avid hunter and fisherman, hunting deer everyday of the deer season within a few miles of his home. He plays in four or five Oldtimers Games per year and in several Pro-Celebrity Golf Tournaments in Florida each spring. He is a devoted Duke fan and never misses a football or basketball game.

In sum, Enos "Country" Slaughter belongs in the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, NY. He was a consistent, accomplished, outfielder and hitter, and his long career deserves to be rewarded.

Mr. BOEHLERT. I thank my distinguished colleague from North Carolina for calling to our attention the outstanding career of one of baseball's finest. As my colleague from North Carolina knows, I have volunteered and the offer was accepted, to be co-chairman of the Enos "Country" Slaughter Hall of Fame Committee and daily we are signing up more members for this activity, because, as the record indicates, he belongs enshrined there in the Baseball Hall of Fame with his teammate of so many years, and my boyhood idol, Stan "The Man" Musial.

Mr. Speaker, we have talked about Mr. Aparicio, the great shortstop, and that outstanding pitcher, Don Drysdale.

Now it is the turn to talk about the Killer, Harmon Killebrew.

What a great career he had. Harmon played so many of his outstanding games right here in our Nation's Capital with the old Washington Senators. Unfortunately, they no longer exist, but he finished up his career, except for a brief stay at the very end with Kansas City, but played for so many years, so many productive years with Minnesota. Look at his record. Harmon Killebrew tied the major league record by hitting two or more home runs in each one of the league's parks in 1962.

He set the American League record for most home runs by a right-handed batter for a league for a lifetime.

No. 1, Harmon Killebrew, 573.

He set the American League record for the most home runs in a doubleheader—four. September 21, 1963, he hit three in the first game, one in the nightcap.

He was named the outfielder of the Sporting News' all-star American League team in 1964, Sporting News'

American League all-star team named him first baseman in 1967 and in 1969, and in 1970 he was named by the Sporting News as the outstanding American League player.

He was named the third baseman in the Sporting News' American League all-star team 1969 and 1970. And, in 1969, Harmon Killebrew was named the most valuable player in the American League.

American sportswriters have selected wisely in placing Clayton Killebrew, Jr., in the Baseball Hall of Fame.

HARMON CLAYTON (KILLER) KILLEBREW, JR.

Born June 29, 1936, at Payette, Idaho. Height, 6.00. Weight, 210. Threw and batted righthanded.

Tied major league record by hitting two or more home runs in each league park, season, 1962.

Set American League record for most home runs, righthanded batter, league, lifetime, 573.

Set American League record for most home runs, doubleheader (4), September 21, 1963—hitting three in first game and one in nightcap.

Named outfielder on The Sporting News All-Star American League Team, 1964.

Named first baseman on The Sporting News American League All-Star Team, 1967.

Named by The Sporting News as the Outstanding American League Player, 1969–70.

Named third baseman on The Sporting News American League All-Star Team, 1969–70.

Most Valuable Player in American League, 1969.

Now about that classic boy of summer, Harold "Pee Wee" Reese of Louisville, KY. He played for the Dodgers from 1940 to 1942. Then he served his country in World War II, returning in 1946, playing on through 1958.

He played in seven World Series for the Dodgers. He led the National League in stolen bases in 1952 with 30. He led the National League in sacrifice hits in 1953 with 15. He led the National League shortstops in double plays from 1942 to 1948, and he tied the National League for walks in 1947.

He led the National League in runs scored in 1949 with 132. And Harold "Pee Wee" Reese led shortstops with a .977 fielding average in 1949.

He holds the World Series record for most double plays by a shortstop in a seven-game series of seven he set in 1955 and 1956. He played shortstop and third base for the Dodgers, and he coached for the Dodgers in 1959.

He was named shortstop on the Sporting News All Star Major League Team in 1953, and he holds the Dodger record for most times reaching first base safely in an inning, three times in one inning in 1952.

He tied the Brooklyn record for fewest grounded into double plays in a series in a season, five in 1949.

He was All Star eight times, Harold "Pee Wee" Reese, another one of those to be enshrined in that mecca of baseball, the National Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, NY, on Sunday, August 12.

HAROLD HENRY (PEE WEE) REESE

Born July 23, 1919, at Ekron, Ky, Height, 5.09½. Weight, 178. Threw and batted righthanded. Married Dorothy Walton, March 29, 1942.

Led National League in stolen bases (30), 1952.

Now tied with Elston Howard for World Series record for most times on losing club (6); holds World Series record for most double plays by a shortstop in seven-game Series (7), 1955 and 1956; tied Series mark for most times at bat, game (6), October 5, 1956.

Named as shortstop on THE SPORTING NEWS All-Star Major League Team, 1953.

Coach, Los Angeles Dodgers, 1959.

Finally, there is from the oldtimers' list Richard Benjamin Ferrell who had a distinguished career, 18 years in the big leagues, one of the finest defensive players ever, and also pretty potent at the bat when it counted. He played for a number of teams and he played so well, Richard Benjamin Ferrell, another entry into the baseball Hall of Fame.

Mr. Speaker, baseball has been, is, and will continue to be the national sport, the national pastime, a pastime that is so good for America because it involves so often families, mom and dad and the kids in tow at the neighborhood ball park.

Most of us do not live in a major league city. Most of America lives removed from the metropolitan areas, but we all plan our summer schedules with the hope and expectation that we will get to see the Yankees or the Dodgers or the Orioles or the Twins or any one of the major league teams. But most of us are also fortunate because we have in our home communities minor league baseball which is the breeding ground of the superstars of tomorrow.

So, as I conclude this special order, I say on behalf of all of us who are privileged to serve in this great House of Representatives, a heartfelt thanks to baseball for giving us so much, and to Aparicio and Drysdale and Ferrel and Killebrew and Reese I say, as do millions of Americans, thanks for the memories.

● Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to join with my colleagues in recognizing the Baseball Hall of Fame inductees: Harmon Killebrew, Don Drysdale, Pee Wee Reese, Luis Aparicio, and Rick Ferrell. These men rose to the top of their profession and are now being rewarded by admission in the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, NY; the ultimate goal for any professional baseball player.

I have been a lifelong baseball fan and this has been translated into an active involvement in minor league baseball. I was president of the Rochester Red Wings—Triple A farm club for the Baltimore Orioles—and the executive vice president of the International League.

I am pleased to join in this tribute to these outstanding players who have also served as perfect role models for young baseball fans. All five of the inductees have had outstanding careers.

Harmon Killebrew stands with Babe Ruth as the second most prolific home run hitter in the American League. "Killer" was named the Most Valuable Player in the American League in 1969 after leading the League in home runs with 49 and runs batted in with 140.

Don Drysdale the big righthander for the Brooklyn and Los Angeles Dodgers during his 13 year career also amassed some very impressive statistics. The "Double D" is the all-time Dodger pitching leader and set one record that may never be broken; 58 scoreless innings and six consecutive shutouts.

Luis Aparicio was the most durable shortstop in major league history. Luis played in over 2,500 games in his 18 year career. Luis' records include the most consecutive years leading the League in stolen bases, most double plays by a shortstop, most assists, and most games played by any shortstop in a career. Luis was the American League Rookie of the Year in 1956 and was named to the All-Star Team five times.

Pee Wee Reese was the Captain of the celebrated Brooklyn Dodgers' "Boys of Summer" in the 1940's and 1950's. In 1969 Pee Wee was named the all-time Dodger shortstop by fans. He played in seven world series and led the National League shortstops in a number of defensive categories seven times. Pee Wee, along with Jackie Robinson, gave the old Dodgers—and baseball—one of the most memorable keystone combinations in the game.

Catcher Rick Ferrell was an outstanding defensive player and offensive threat in a career that spanned three decades and three teams. Ferrel spent most of his career with the Washington Senators and was adored by the loyal baseball fans here in the Nation's Capital.●

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, baseball is a subject—as you all undoubtedly know—on which I am always anxious to comment. This occasion is no exception, and it is a particularly special one. The Baseball Hall of Fame holds a high place on my list of of important organizations. Contained in this facility is a history of one of our country's favorite pastimes.

This year's inductees to the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown—Luis Aparicio, Don Drysdale, Harmon Killebrew, Rick Ferrell, and Pee Wee Reese—are receiving the greatest honor imaginable in this all-American sport. I am proud to stand here today and to speak in their honor. These ball players stand for a proud generation of baseball careers. Their contributions to the game and to its many fans are overwhelming, and I salute them for this.

Luis Aparicio played as shortstop for the Boston Red Sox in my home State of Massachusetts, where he had a fine record. He has established many major league records in his career—achieving the title American League Rookie of the Year from the Baseball Writers Association and the Sporting News in 1956—and he was a credit to another fine team, the Chicago White Sox. Don Drysdale—the all time Dodgers pitching leader in seven categories—is an equally deserving inductee. Don established major league records for most consecutive shutout games won. And then there's the "Killer"—Harmon Killebrew. All of us here are special fans of his because he started in Washington with the Senators. The Killer was named Most Valuable Player in the American League in 1969, playing for the Minnesota Twins. Rick Ferrell earned his colors with Washington as well. He, like Aparicio, was with the Red Sox early in his career. Finally, we have Pee Wee Reese, and what a player he was. Pee Wee played in seven World Series for the Dodgers.

You know, I'd be willing to bet that by 1988 some of my own colleagues from the Republican congressional baseball team that I manage will also be inducted. By some gross error, we've all been overlooked thus far.

I truly believe, however, that the Baseball Hall of Fame holds as much in store for us as that which it has already provided. With a fine new commissioner of baseball, Peter Ueberroth, and many terrific players coming down the road, this is surely a tradition that will continue as an important part of our athletic archives. It is estimated that 225,000 people visit the Hall of Fame each year, and we all know how much it means to the kids who go in there and see their dreams of being pro-ball players themselves some day come true.

Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate once again these wonderful Hall of Fame inductees for their commitment to baseball, and for their recognition as being among the finest of players in this, America's favorite sport.

Thank you very much.●

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I take pride in honoring Harold (Pee Wee) Reese of Louisville, KY, upon his long-awaited and long-overdue, but entirely appropriate, induction into Baseball's Hall of Fame at Cooperstown, NY.

Pee Wee was the captain and outstanding shortstop of the Brooklyn Dodgers on those celebrated "Boys of Summer" teams of the forties and fifties during his 16 seasons, he played in over 2,000 games, performed in seven world series and helped Brooklyn to its only world championship in 1955.

Pee Wee was an outstanding fielder and a clutch hitter. He holds the Dodger record for runs scored and is second to Zack Wheat in career hits and games played. Had he not missed 3 years during World War II because of Navy service, he would most likely be first in both categories.

The fans in Brooklyn loved and revered Pee Wee. In 1956, during a night game at historic Ebbets Field, a large birthday cake was delivered to home plate. The lights were then turned out and everybody in the ball park lit a match and sang "Happy Birthday" to Pee Wee.

Pee Wee's leadership qualities extended far beyond the baseball diamond. In 1947 Pee Wee's kindness and compassion towards Jackie Robinson—the first black major leaguer—was an example to his teammates and the rest of the league that baseball is a sport for everybody.

Pee Wee is now a successful sales representative for the Hillerich and Bradsby Louisville Slugger Bat Co. and an avid, accomplished golfer.

I congratulate, Louisville's own Pee Wee Reese, and his family on Pee Wee's appointment to baseball's Hall of Fame.●

RIDICULE OF ETHNIC GROUPS IN BROADCAST MEDIA MUST STOP

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my continuing concern about films, as well as radio and television broadcasts which defame, stereotype, demean, or degrade ethnic, racial, and religious groups.

Denigrating remarks about any group in our society concerning characteristics over which one has no control, such as race and ethnicity, and those which are associated with the very beginning and ending of life, such as religion, are immoral in themselves. More importantly, however, and of special concern to Congress, is that they strike at the very heart of a healthy and wholesome political system. For the vitality of our Government and the principles for which it stands depend upon harmonious relations among various ethnic groups. From the mutual respect accorded these groups will grow a stronger and more dynamic democracy.

The motion picture, radio, and television industries have on occasion been less than diligent in their responsibility to help create a society in which individuals can respect their heritage and its institutions, and throughout my career as a Member of the House of Representatives, I have called upon the Congress to take a leadership role in standing against ethnic denigration.

The members of minority and ethnic groups should not have to witness stereotypes and other negative portrayals of people of their own heritage. Each minority group is justifiably proud of its ancestry, its accomplishments, and its contributions to American society. When this self-pride is threatened, we jeopardize the human quality which have most contributed to America's greateness.

Stereotypes as presented on television can be particularly influential to a young child. To a great degree, we become what we see, whether in life or in the media. Thus the challenge to the media is very great indeed, since modeling implies that children will be influenced not only by what they are told to be like but also by observing what people with whom they can identify are actually like or portrayed as being.

The motion picture and broadcast media have become central to the American way of life and have profound influence, particularly on children. The television set is a perfect instrument for those who would spawn prejudiced against and prejudgment of our fellow human beings.

In such situations, democracy and representative government do not have a chance. Insulted groups harden hearts and minds to others and freedom of speech becomes a monolog rather than a dialog. When private industry defaults in its social responsibility, it is the purpose of Government to step in to exercise the society's social conscience.

It is for these reasons that I introduced House Concurrent Resolution 2, a bill which would put the Congress of the United States on record in opposition to films, as well as television and radio broadcasts, which demean and degrade ethnic, racial, and religious groups. Also, I was glad to add my name as a cosponsor to H.R. 3105, the Ethnic Affairs Clearing House Broadcasting Act, a bill to establish a Complaint Bureau within the Federal Communications Commission to monitor complaints and grievances regarding radio and television broadcast programing which unfairly depict ethnic groups. This legislation also encourages scholarly research and conferences to play an educational role in developing a positive portrayal of ethnic groups in the media.

Mr. Speaker, with the immense influences that the media today has on American life, a greater sensitivity should be encouraged in the depiction of ethnic groups. The passage of legislation such as House Concurrent Resolution 2 and H.R. 3015 will go a long way toward the elimination of derogatory and defamatory materials which reinforce negative ethnic stereotypes and I urge all my colleagues in the House of Representatives to support these bills.

RULE NOTICE FOR H.R. 4277

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. DINGELL. Mr Speaker, I take this opportunity to advise the House of the intention of the Committee on Energy and Commerce to seek from the Committee on Rules a modified open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 4277, the National Gas Market Policy Act of 1984.●

ABC NEWS ANCHORMEN EXPRESS RESERVATIONS ABOUT ELECTION PROJECTIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, I call to your attention and to the attention of my colleagues the following excerpt from the ABC News program "Viewpoint" which aired on July 9. I urge those of you who may not have seen this program to read the portion of the program's transcript which I am inserting into the RECORD today.

This program, intended to allow for comment on ABC's news coverage, included a segment on the network practice of characterizing and projecting election results before the polls close through the use of exit polls. This segment contained some very interesting comments on early projections by both viewers and the news anchors themselves.

ABC reported that its own poll revealed that 78 percent of those questioned felt the networks should wait for the polls to close before projecting a winner. Of those individuals, 61 percent supported a law prohibiting the broadcast networks from making projections.

The most interesting comments, however, came from ABC's own news anchormen. Peter Jennings, anchorman for "World News Tonight," said:

As a personal citizen, I don't like exit polls as any indicator of the way the race is going. . . . We do . . . look at our exit polls and see how people have been voting and imply that it's going fairly well or fairly bad for them. I must say I'm personally opposed to them.

Steve Bell, ABC's anchor of "World News This Morning", joined Jennings in expressing his reservations about the network's early projections:

I am concerned that we are engaging in a process as journalists that is drawing such a high degree of public concern that it can have an effect not only on the elections. . . . Whatever the public perception, when it's as overwhelming as it is in this case, I think the half-pregnancy that we're engaging in needs to be rethought.

These comments show that concern over the impact of early election projections on voter turnout is shared by those very journalists who are compelled by network management to use them. It appears that many journalists would exercise the kind of editorial judgement recently urged by the House when it overwhelmingly passed Concurrent Resolution 321 if network management were not preoccupied solely with high ratings and the quest to be first with every story, unaffected by any sense of their civic responsibilities.

This transcript is very revealing, and I urge my colleagues to read it carefully.

The transcript follows:

KOPPEL: News organizations consider it one of their proudest achievements—the ability to accurately project election results on an election night. It's highly competitive business, and the networks constantly vie with one another for the best technology to achieve the most scientific results. But others are not too happy with the process, particular when it means projecting winners even before all the polls are closed. How does the public feel about that? Here again is Lynn Sherr with the results of our Viewpoint survey.

ANNOUNCER: March 13th, 1984. From ABC, this is World News Tonight.

PETER JENNINGS: This set or primaries and caucuses has been widely seen as John Glenn's last chance to stay in the race, and the indications are that he is doing pretty well in Alabama.

LYNN SHEER: Senator, I wonder if you could tell us if this makes you rethink any of your plans? Does it complicate your life?

Sen. JOHN GLENN: No I think, you know, I don't like all these advance analyses. I think when these things are put out before the polls even close, you know, it discourages people from going to the polls, I've been depending on a big turnout here.

SHERR: At 6:37 p.m. Eastern time on Super Tuesday. John Glenn was visibly angry that ABC News and other networks reported what appeared to be his standing in the Alabama primary an hour and a half before the polls closed. As it turns out, most of the people in our poll agree that we should not characterize the races until everyone has had a chance to vote.

[voice-over] Nearly four-fifths of those questioned, 78% say networks should wait for the polls to close before projecting a winner. Of them, three-fifths, or 61%, believe there should be a law requiring the networks to refrain from such projections.

JOAN ROGERS, Boston: I don't think they should project an outcome at all, because it definitely will sway people to go with a winner or change their vote one way or the other.

ALICE COOKSEY, Pantego. Texas: We lived in California during the 1980 election, and I remember being dismayed that Reagan had already been projected winner before we even had a chance to vote.

ROBERT SALMON, Boston: You don't go out and vote if you know your candidate's going to lose in the first place. And every vote counts.

STAN VAINRIB, Chicago: This is a free country. They're allowed to do whatever they want. But I think they should do it with a little more constraint and a little more responsibility.

SHERR [voice-over]: On the other hand, most of the people in our poll said they hadn't heard such network projections. Of those who did hear, most said it didn't influence their vote. And on a related matter, when we asked people whether they would watch the political conventions on TV this summer, more than half. 58%, said no.

KOPPEL: Well, what do you think about that?

Mr. JENNINGS: Well, I feel I'm in a very ambiguous position. I'm going to defer as quickly as I respectively can to Ed Fouhy, who's in management. As a personal citizen, I don't like exit polls as any indicator of the way the race is going, because I quite frankly think it takes fun out of the campaign; it takes the fun out of the whole democratic process, and I don't like it. That's a purely personal view as a citizen, as a television viewer, as someone who likes to see the process unfold at a somewhat more leisurely pace.

KOPPEL: Excuse me, Peter, but what does fun have to do with journalism?

Mr. JENNINGS: No, let me finish, I said as a purely private citizen and as a viewer. As a journalist, on the other hand, I feel very strongly compelled to report news as we have it. And one of the things that we have to make fairly clear is that we do not use exit polls to project races. We do not say Walter Mondale is going to win in Alabama based on our exit polls. To do that we use key precincts, a much wider, more exhaustive process of scientific information. And that we do not report before the polls have closed. We do, as I just did there with John Glenn in Alabama, look at our exit polls and see how people have been voting and imply that it's going fairly well or fairly bad for them. I must say I'm personally opposed to them.

KOPPEL: Ed, do we try to be just a little bit pregnant on this? Do we try to, as Peter just said, imply something and therefore maintain this holier-than-thou attitude that after all we didn't say it?

Mr. FOUHY: I don't associate restraint with pregnancy. I would like to use the word restraint. I think we restrain ourselves from reporting everything that we know while the polls are open in a given state. There is no scientific knowledge as to what effect exit polls and early reporting of their results has on voter behavior as we could see. A number of people said they wouldn't care whether or not a candidate had been declared a winner or a loser. They'd go and vote anyway. I think what it goes back to is a sort of—and you touched on it, Ted—A nostalgic yearning for an America that once existed before there were computers, perhaps before there was radio and television, when people sat around bonfires and waited for the telegraph to announce the results maybe two or three days after election. The technology exists. We use it. We use it, I believe, in a restrained way. But the fact is that when there are 270 electoral votes counted up on a presidential election—and incidentally, you can acquire 270 electoral votes in the Eastern and Central time zones—the candidate who has those votes has been elected president. And that's the news; that's a major news story and we're going to report it.

KOPPEL: All right. New question.

MAN: Yes. I have a question for Mr. Donaldson regarding exit polls. I believe a Vermont or New Hampshire court ruling just questioned the legality of the collection of exit polls because they infringe on a person's right to privacy to secret ballot. Would you agree with that, or would you disagree with it?

Mr. DONALDSON: I'm not familiar with the court ruling you cite. In general I think, as Ed Fouhy has said, we ought to tell the news that we have. And when we know that someone is going to win an election because of our key precincts and our exit polling, then I think we ought to report that. In the old days we'd go up and talk to the ward boss and say. "How's it going here?" He'd say, "Well, I think we're all right here." And he'd check off his list and he'd say, "I think we're going to take this by 87 votes." No one objected to that. I think the objection comes because we are accurate. People say, well, it takes all the fun out of it. An election is not something for fun; it's a very serious business, and reporting is very serious business. And people then say, "Well, I was going to vote, but I heard my candidate had lost; I didn't go vote. "But they suppose, I guess, that all the people who heard their candidate had won did in fact still go vote. That doesn't make any sense.

KOPPEL: Sam, we're coming down into the waning moment of this program. What I'd like to do is squeeze in as many questions as we possibly can during those last few moments. So go ahead, sir, and let's—one question to each person.

MAN: I'd like to address my question to Mr. Bell, please. With respect to local elections, it seems to me that by polling voters after they voted, it seems to me that local elections are somewhat biased in the sense that if it's predicted that President Reagan for instance is gonna be—is winning in certain precincts, voters in those precincts will be less likely to go out and vote, and thus the local elections would be biased. Don't you feel that it's somewhat like having a horse race and allowing the people to place bets after they've rounded the first turn?

KOPPEL: All right. I think the question has something to do with the coattail effect. If—well, go ahead.

Mr. BELL: Well, I'm going to be the genuine dissenter here, I guess, in that I am concerned that we are engaging in a process as journalists that is drawing such a high degree of public concern that it can have an effect not only on the elections—and I know you're saying, all right, if you know the president's elected before California polls are closed, the president's backers don't bother to go and so local candidates are directly affected; it may change a local race. Whatever the public perception, when it's as overwhelming as it is in this case, I think the half-pregnancy that we're engaging in needs to be rethought. [applause]●

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO IMPROVE THE IMPACT OF FOREIGN SALES CORPORATION PROVISIONS ON AMERICANS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, a major change in the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 involved the substitution of a new program called foreign sales corporations [FSC] in lieu of the old domestic international sales corporation [DISC] program. While the two programs are similar, FSC generally meets the general agreement on tariffs and trade [GATT] better than did DISC. It does this in part by authorizing the creation of companies in either a foreign country or a possession outside the U.S., customs territory. Also, a FSC is required to locate an office in either a foreign country or possession, where it must maintain a set of books of account.

Mr. Speaker, I had a lot of problems with DISC and I have problems with FSC. It is awfully hard, for example, to understand the economic rationale for a tax export promotion program in an age of floating exchange rates. The tax benefits usually go to a couple hundred large companies. It is an enormous complication in the tax code, and a subsidy to do what is in the best interests of the companies to do for themselves.

But the new FSC program adds another wrinkle that seems strange. By telling companies that they have to set up an export company outside the U.S. customs area, we are encouraging the export of some corporate administrative expenses abroad. These are really dummy corporations with little or no substance—but each of them will cost some money to set up, will require some local presence, and will entail travel abroad. Indeed, by encouraging the set up of these companies abroad—perhaps largely in the Caribbean—we are providing new excuses for expense-paid vacations to the sunny isles.

Since the FSC provisions and GATT requirements may be met if these companies are organized and set up in a possession outside the U.S. customs territory, why can't Congress limit them to these American sites? The simple answer is that we can and should, and I am introducing today a bill to accomplish this result.

When we first considered the FSC provisions, it seemed to me that we were wrong in permitting the needless export of American dollars to originate these companies in the Bahamas or some other foreign country. As Americans, we have the duty and responsibility to take care of our possessions first. They can use the business.

Furthermore, it will help the Nation's tax base for a FSC located outside the U.S. customs area to have an exclusively American connection. This linkage will mean increased economic stimulation within American possessions, more jobs, increased spendable income for American citizens and ultimately more tax revenue for the United States.

Why shouldn't the benefits from selling the goods and services required to create a FSC go to Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Virgin Islands of the United States? We often treat our possessions rather shabbily and as forgotten members of the family. With this bill, we have a unique opportunity to do something really worthwhile for them and their economies.

Messrs. DE LUGO, WON PAT, and SUNIA have joined with me in cosponsoring this worthwhile legislation.

I hope that the Ways and Means Committee will act on this measure early next year. In the interim, I urge and advise American firms to organize their FSC operations in our American possessions located outside the U.S. Customs territory. This is the right course for them to take as American taxpayers and the best result for our Nation as well.●

TITLE VI—OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY AND COMPENSATION

SHORT TITLE AND DEFINITIONS

SEC. 601. (a) Titles VI through IX may be cited as the "Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act."

(b) For the purposes of this Act, the term—

(1) "barrel" means forty-two United States gallons at sixty degrees Fahrenheit;

(2) "claim" means a demand in writing for a sum certain;

(3) "cleanup costs" means costs of reasonable measures taken, after an incident has occurred, to prevent, minimize, or mitigate oil pollution from that incident;

(4) "discharge" means any emission, intentional or unintentional, and includes spilling, leaking, pumping, pouring, emptying, or dumping;

(5) "facility" means a structure, or group of structures, which is either—

(A) located, in whole or in part, on the outer Continental Shelf and used for the purposes of exploring for, drilling for, producing, storing, handling, transferring, processing, or transporting oil produced from the Outer Continental Shelf, or

(B) licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974;

(6) "foreign claimant" means any person residing in a foreign country, the government of a foreign country, or any agency or political subdivision thereof, who asserts a claim;

(7) "guarantor" means the person, other than the responsible party, who provides evidence of financial responsibility for a responsible party;

(8) "incident" means any occurrence or series of occurrences having the same origin, involving one or more vessels, facilities, or any combination thereof, which causes, or poses a substantial threat, of oil pollution;

(9) "inland oil barge" means a non-self-propelled vessel, carrying oil in bulk as cargo or in residue from cargo and certificated to operate only on the internal waters of the United States while operating in such waters;

(10) "internal waters of the United States" means those waters of the United States lying inside the baseline from which the territorial sea is measured and those waters outside that baseline which are a part of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway;

(11) "lessee" means a person holding a leasehold interest in an oil and gas lease on submerged lands of the Outer Continental Shelf granted or maintained under the Outer Continental Shelf Act;

(12) "licensee" means a person holding a license issued under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974;

(13) "mobile offshore drilling unit" means every watercraft or other contrivance (other than a public vessel of the United States) capable of use as a means of transportation on water and as a means of drilling for oil on the Outer Continental Shelf;

(14) "natural resources" means living and nonliving resources belonging to, managed by, held in trust by, appertaining to, or otherwise controlled by the United States (including the resources of the fishery conservation zone established by the Fishery Conservation and Management Act of 1976), any State or local government, or any foreign government;

(15) "Navigable waters" means the waters of the United States, including the territorial sea;

(16) "oil" means petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom;

(17) "oil pollution" means—

(A) the presence of oil which has been discharged from a vessel or facility in quantities which the President has determined may be harmful pursuant to paragraph (4) of subsection (b) of section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act—

(i) in or on the navigable waters or on land within the United States immediately adjacent thereto; or

(ii) in or on waters of the contiguous zone established by the United States under article 24 of the Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone; or

(B) the presence of oil (other than natural seepage) in or on the high seas outside the territorial limits of the United States—

(i) when discharged in connection with activities conducted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(ii) when discharged from a deepwater port licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 or from a vessel transiting to or from a deepwater port and located in a safety zone of a deepwater port licensed under such Act;

(iii) causing injury to or loss of natural resources belonging to, appertaining to, or under the exclusive management authority of, the United States; or

(iv) when discharged, prior to being brought ashore in a port in the United States, from a ship that received oil at the terminal of the pipeline constructed under the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act (43 U.S.C. 1651 et seq.) for transportation to a port in the United States; or

(C) the presence of oil (other than natural seepage) in or on the territorial sea, internal waters, or adjacent shoreline, of a foreign country, in a case where damages are recoverable by a foreign claimant under section 603(b)(6) of this title; (18) "operator" means—

(A) in the case of a vessel, a charterer by demise or any other person, except the owner, who is responsible for the operation, manning, victualing, and supplying of the vessel; or

(B) in the case of a pipeline, any person, except the owner, who is responsible for the operation of such pipeline by agreement with the owner;

(19) "outer Continental Shelf" has the meaning set forth in subsection (a) of section 2 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(20) "owner" means, in the case of a vessel or a pipeline, any person holding title to, or in the absence of title, any other indicia of ownership of, the vessel or pipeline, whether by lease, permit, contract, license, or other form of agreement, except that such term does not include a person who, without participating in the management or operation of a vessel or a pipeline, holds indicia of ownership primarily to protect his security interest in the vessel or pipeline;

(21) "permittee" means a person holding an authorization, license, or permit for geological exploration issued under section 11 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(22) "person" means an individual, firm, corporation, association, partnership, consortium, joint venture, or any other commercial, legal, or governmental entity;

(23) "public vessel" means a vessel which—

(A) is owned or chartered by demise, and operated by (i) the United States, (ii) a State or political subdivision thereof, or (iii) a foreign government, and

(B) is not engaged in commercial service;

(24) "removal costs" means—

(A) costs incurred under subsection (c), (d), or (l) of section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, section 5 of the Intervention on the High Seas Act, or subsection (b) of section 18 of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974, and

(B) cleanup costs, other than the costs described in subparagraph (A);

(25) "responsible party" means—

(A) with respect to a vessel or a pipeline, the owner or operator of such vessel or pipeline;

(B) with respect to a facility (other than a deepwater port or pipeline), the lessee or permittee of the area in which such facility is located, or the hodler of a right of use and easement granted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act for the area in which such facility is located where such holder is a different person than the lessee or permittee; and

(C) with respect to a deepwater port, the licensee;

(26) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation;

(27) "ship" means a vessel (other than an inland oil barge) carrying oil in bulk as cargo or in residue from cargo;

(28) "Trust Fund" means the fund established by section 201 of this Act;

(29) "United States" and "State" include the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States;

(30) "United States claimant" means any person residing in the United States, the Government of the United States or any agency thereof, or the government of a State or a political subdivision thereof, who asserts a claim; and

(31) "vessel" means every description of watercraft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water.

COORDINATION WITH INTERNATIONAL CONVENTIONS

SEC. 602. On and after the first date on which both the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage and the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage are in force with respect to the United States, this title shall not apply with respect to damage arising out of or directly resulting from oil pollution or a substantial threat of oil pollution to the extent this title is inconsistent with such conventions and title IX of this Act.

DAMAGES AND CLAIMANTS

SEC. 603. (a) Claims for damages for economic loss, incurred on or after the effective date of this section and arising out of or directly resulting from oil pollution or the substantial threat of oil pollution, may be asserted for—

(1) removal costs;

(2) injury to, or destruction of, real or personal property;

(3) injury to, or destruction of, natural resources, including reasonable costs incurred by the trustee of the damaged resources in assessing both short-term and long-term injury to, or destruction of, the damaged resources, preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged resources, and restoring or acquiring the equivalent of the damaged resources;

(4) loss of subsistence use of natural resources;

(5) loss of profits or impairment of earning capacity due to injury or destruction of real or personal property or natural resources to the extent that such damages were sustained during the two-year period beginning on the date the claimant first suffered such loss; and

(6) loss of tax revenue for a period of one year due to injury to real or personal property.

(b)(1) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) by any claimant, except that the responsible party with respect to a vessel or facility involved in an incident may assert such a claim only if he can show that he is entitled to a defense to liability under section 604(c) of this title or, if not entitled to such a defense to liability, that he is entitled to a limitation of liability under section 604(b) of this title, in which case the claim may be asserted only to the extent that the sum of the removal costs incurred by the responsible party plus the amounts paid by the responsible party or by the guarantor on behalf of the responsible party for claims asserted under subsection (a) of this section exceeds the amount to which the total of the liability under section 604(a) and removal costs incurred by, or on behalf of, the responsible party is limited under section 604(b).

(2) A claim may be asserted under paragraphs (2) and (4) of subsection (a) by any United States claimant, if the property involved is owned or leased, or the natural resource involved is utilized, by the claimant.

(3) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (3) of subsection (a) by the President, as trustee for natural resources over which the United States Government has sovereign rights or exercises exclusive management authority, or by the Governor of any State for natural resources within the boundary of the State belonging to, managed by, controlled by, or appertaining to the State. Compensation paid under this paragraph may be used only for assessing both short-term and long-term injury to, or destruction of, the damaged resources, preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged resources, and restoring or acquiring the equivalent of the damaged resources.

(4) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (5) of subsection (a) by any United States claimant if the claimant derives at least 25 per centum of his earnings from activities which utilize the property or natural resource or, if such activities are seasonal in nature, 25 per centum of the claimant's earnings during the season in which such activities took place.

(5) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (6) of subsection (a) by any State or political subdivision thereof.

(6) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, a claim may be asserted under paragrahs (2), (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (a) by a foriegn claimant to the same extent tha a United States claimant may assert a claim if—

(A) the oil pollution occurred in the waters, including the territorial sea, or adjacent shoreline of a foreign country of which the claimant is a resident;

(B) the claimant is not otherwise compensated for his loss;

(C) the oil was discharged from a vessel located within the navigable waters, was discharged in connection with activities conducted under Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, or was discharged from a deepwater port licensed under Deepwater Port Act of 1974 or a vessel transitting to or from a deepwater port and located in a safety zone of a deepwater port under such Act; and

(D) recovery is authorized by a treaty or an executive agreement between the United States and the foreign country of which the claimant is a resident, or the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Attorney General and other appropriate officials, certifies that such country provides a comparable remedy for United States claimants.

In the case of any oil pollution involving oil that has been transported through the pipeline constructed under the provisions of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, has been loaded on a vessel for transportation to a port in the United States, and is discharged from such vessel before being unloaded in that port, a claim may be asserted by a resident of Canada without regard to subparagraphs (A), (C), and (D) of this paragraph, to the same extent that a United States claimant may assert a claim.

(7) A claim may be asserted under any paragraph of subsection (a), by the Attorney General, on his own motion or at the request of the Secretary, on behalf of any group of United States claimants who may assert a claim under this subsection.

(c) If the Attorney General fails to act under paragraph (7) of subsection (b) within sixty days after the date on which the Secretary designates a source under section 606, any member of a group may assert a claim for damages on behalf of that group. Failure of the Attorney General to act shall have no bearing on any claim for damages asserted under this section.

LIABILITY

SEC. 604. (a)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection and subsections (b) and (c) of this section, the responsible party with respect to a facility or a vessel (other than a public vessel) that is the source of oil pollution, or poses a substantial threat of oil pollution in circumstances that justify the incurrence of the type of costs described in section 601(b)(24)(A) of this title, shall be jointly, severally, and strictly liable for all damages for which a claim may be asserted under section 603.

(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, in any case in which a mobile offshore drilling unit is being used as a facility and is the source of oil pollution originating on or above the surface of the water or poses the substantial threat of such oil pollution, such unit shall be deemed to be a vessel which is a ship for purposes of this title.

(B) To the extent that damages for which claims may be asserted under section 603 from any incident described in subparagraph (A) exceed the amount for which the responsible party is liable under subparagraph (A) (as such amount may be limited under subsection (b)(2) of this section), the mobile offshore drilling unit shall be deemed to be a facilty covered by subsection (b)(4) of this section, except that for purposes of applying subsection (b)(4) the amount specified in such subsection shall be reduced by the amount for which the responsible party with respect to a ship is liable under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

(C) In the case of any incident described in subparagraph (A) which is caused primarily by willful misconduct or gross negligence within the privity or knowledge of both the owner or operator of the mobile offshore drilling unit and the lessee or permittee of the area, or holder of a right of use or easement for the area, in which such unit is located; or which is caused primarily by a violation within the privity or knowledge of both such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder of applicable safety, constructions, or operating standards or regulations of the United States; or with respect to which both such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder fail or refuse to report the incident where required by law or to provide all reasonable cooperation and assistance requested by the responsible Federal official in furtherance of cleanup activities, such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder shall be jointly, severally, and strictly liable (without limitation under subsection (b)) for all loss for which a claim may be asserted under section 603 of this title.

(b) Except when the incident is caused primarily by willful misconduct or gross negligence within the privity or knowledge of a responsible party, or is caused primarily by a violation within the privity or knowledge of a responsible party of applicable safety, construction, or operating standards or regulations of the United States; and except when a responsible party fails or refuses to report the incident where required by law or to provide all reasonable cooperation and assistance requested by the responsible Federal official in furtherance of cleanup activities, the total of the liability under subsection (a) of this section and any removal costs incurred by, or on behalf of, such responsible party shall be limited to—

(1) in the case of a vessel other than a ship or an inland oil barge, $150 per gross ton;

(2) in the case of a ship, $1,000,000 or $400 per gross ton, whichever is greater (but not to exceed $40,000,000);

(3) in the case of an inland oil barge, $150,000 or $150 per gross ton, whichever is greater; or

(4) in the case of a facility, $50,000,000.

The Secretary shall, from time to time, report to Congress on the desirability of adjusting the limitations of liability specified in this subsection.

(c)(1) Except when the responsible party has failed or refused to report an incident where required by law, there shall be no liability under subsection (a) of this section if such responsible party proves that the incident—

(A) resulted from an act of war, hostilities, civil war, insurrection, or a natural phenomenon of an exceptional, inevitable, and irresistible character, or

(B) was wholly caused by an act or omission of a person other than—

(i) a responsible party;

(ii) an employee or agent of a responsible party; or

(iii) one whose act or omission occurs in connection with a contractual relationship with a responsible party.

(2) There shall be no liability under subsection (a) of this section—

(A) as to a particular claimant, where the incident or economic loss is caused, in whole or in part, by the gross negligence or willful misconduct of that claimant; or

(B) as to a particular claimant, to the extent that the incident or economic loss is caused by the negligence of that claimant.

(d)(1) Except as provided in title VII the Trust Fund shall be liable for damages for which claims may be asserted under section 603 of this title and which are presented under this title, to the extent that the loss is not otherwise compensated.

(2) Except for the removal costs specified in section 601(b)(24)(A) of this title, there shall be no liability under paragraph (1) of this subsection—

(A) where the incident is caused wholly by an act of war, hostilities, civil war, or insurrection;

(B) as to a particular claimant, where the incident or the economic loss is caused, in whole or in part, by the gross negligence or willful misconduct of that claimant; or

(C) as to a particular claimant, to the extent that the incident or the economic loss is caused by the negligence of that claimant.

(e)(1) In addition to the damages for which claims may be asserted under section 603 of this title, and without regard to any limitations of liability provided in subsection (b) of this section, the responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel, or his guarantor (subject to the guarantor's limitation set forth in subsection (d) of section 605 of this title), shall be liable to the claimant for interest on the amount paid in satisfaction of the claim for the period from the date upon which the claim was presented to the responsible party or guarantor to the date upon which the claimant is paid, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the responsible party or guarantor shall offer to the claimant an amount equal to or greater than that finally paid in satisfaction of the claim to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that amount, inclusive. However, if the responsible party or guarantor shall offer to the claimant, within sixty days of the date upon which the claim was presented, or of the date upon which advertising was commenced pursuant to section 606 of this title, whichever is later, an amount equal to or greater than that finally paid in satisfaction of the claim, the responsible party or guarantor shall be liable for the interest provided in this paragraph only from the date the offer was accepted by the claimant to the date upon which payment is made to the claimant, inclusive.

(2) The interest provided in paragraph (1) shall be calculated at the average of the highest rate for commercial and finance company paper of maturities of one hundred and eighty days or less obtaining on each of the days included within the period for which interest must be paid to the claimant, as published in the Federal Reserve bulletin.

(f)(1) A responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel may not transfer the liability imposed under this section to any other person.

(2) Nothing in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall preclude an agreement whereby a person who, by an agreement with a responsible party with respect to a facility utilized in activities under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, is engaged in such activities, agrees to indemnify the responsible party for the liability imposed under subsection (a) of this section. Nothing in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall preclude an agreement whereby a person who owns or operates a towing vessel, by an agreement with a responsible party with respect to a non-self-propelled vessel, agrees to indemnify the responsible party for the liability imposed under subsection (a) of this section.

(g) Nothing in this title shall bar a cause of action that a responsible party subject to liability under this section or a guarantor has or would have by reason of subrogation or otherwise against any person.

(h) To the extent that it is in conflict with, or otherwise inconsistent with, any other law relating to liability or the limitation thereof, this section supersedes such other law.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

SEC. 605. (a)(1) The responsible party with respect to each vessel (except a public vessel or a non-self-propelled vessel that does not carry oil as cargo or fuel) over three hundred gross tons that uses a facility or the navigable waters shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility sufficient to satisfy the maximum liability under section 604 of this title to which the responsible party would be exposed in a case where he would be entitled to limit his liability in accordance with subsection (b) of section 604 of this title. In cases where a responsible party owns or operates more than one vessel subject to this subsection, evidence of financial responsibility need be established only to meet the maximum liability applicable to the largest of such vessels.

(2) The Secretary of the Treasury shall withhold or revoke the clearance required by section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of any vessel subject to this subsection that does not have the certification required under this subsection or the regulations issued hereunder.

(3) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may (A) deny entry to any facility, to any port or place in the United States, or to the navigable waters, of (B) detain at the facility or at the port or place in the United States, any vessel subject to this subsection that, upon request, does not produce the certification required under this subsection or regulations issued hereunder.

(b) The responsible party with respect to each facility shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility sufficient to satisfy the maximum amount of liability to which the responsible party would be exposed in a case where he would be entitled to limit his liability in accordance with subsection (b) of section 604 of this title. In cases where the responsible party is responsible for more than one facility subject to this subsection, evidence of financial responsibility need be established only to meet the maximum liability applicable to one such facility.

(c) Financial responsibility under this section may be established by any one, or by any combination, of the following methods acceptable to the Secretary: evidence of insurance, surety bond, qualification as a self-insurer, or other evidence of financial responsibility. Any bond filed shall be issued by a bonding company authorized to do business in the United States.

(d) Any claim authorized by section 603(a) of this title may be asserted directly against any guarantor providing evidence of financial responsibility as required under this section for any responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel. In defending against such a claim, the guarantor may invoke all rights and defenses which would be available to the responsible party under this title. He may also invoke the defense that the incident was caused by the willful misconduct of the responsible party, but he may not invoke any other defense that he might be entitled to invoke in proceedings brought by the responsible party against him.

(e) Nothing in this title shall impose liability with respect to an incident on any guarantor for damages or removal costs which exceeds in the aggregate the amount of financial responsibility which that guarantor has provided for each responsible party. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit any other statutory, contractual, or common law liability of a guarantor to any responsible party for whom such guarantor provides evidence of financial responsibility including, but not limited to, the liability of such guarantor for negotiating in bad faith a settlement of any claim.

DESIGNATION AND ADVERTISEMENT

SEC. 606. (a)(1) When the Secretary receives information of an incident that involves oil pollution, he shall, where possible and appropriate, designate the source or sources of the oil pollution and shall immediately notify the responsible party and the guarantor, if known, of that designation.

(2) When a source designated is a vessel or facility, and the responsible party or guarantor fails to inform the Secretary, within five days after receiving notification of the designation, of his denial of the designation, the responsible party or guarantor, as required by regulations promulgated by the Secretary, shall advertise the designation and the procedures by which claims may be presented to such responsible party or guarantor. If advertisement is not otherwise made in accordance with this paragraph, the Secretary shall, as he finds necessary, and at the expense of the responsible party or the guarantor involved, advertise the designation and the procedures by which claims may be presented to that responsible party or guarantor.

(b) In a case where—

(1) the responsible party and the guarantor both deny a designation in accordance with paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this section,

(2) the source of the discharge was a public vessel, or

(3) the Secretary is unable to designate the source or sources of the discharge under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary shall, in accordance with section 607 of this title, advertise or otherwise notify potential claimants of the procedures by which claims may be presented to the Trust Fund.

(c) Advertisement under subsection (a) shall commence no later than fifteen days from the date of the designation made thereunder and shall continue for a period of no less than thirty days.

CLAIMS SETTLEMENT

SEC. 607. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, all claims shall be presented to the responsible party or guarantor designated under section 606(a) of this title.

(b) Claims may be presented to the Trust Fund—

(1) where the Secretary has advertised or otherwise notified claimants in accordance with section 606(b) of this title; or

(2) where the responsible party may assert a claim under section 603(b)(1) of this title.

(c) In the case of a claim presented in accordance with subsection (a) of this section, and in which—

(1) each person to whom the claim is presented denies all liability for the claim, for any reason, or

(2) the claim is not settled by any person by payment within sixty days of the date upon which (A) the claim was presented, or (B) advertising was commenced pursuant to section 606(a)(2) of this title, whichever is later, the claimant may elect to commence an action in court against the responsible party or guarantor or to present the claim to the Trust Fund, that election to be irrevocable and exclusive.

(d) In the case of a claim presented in accordance with subsection (a) of this section, where full and adequate compensation is unavailable, either because the claim exceeds a limit of liability invoked under section 604 of this title or because the responsible party and his guarantor are financially incapable of meeting their obligations in full, a claim for the uncompensated damages may be presented to the Trust Fund.

(e) In the case of claim which has been presented to any person under subsection (a) of this section and which is being presented to the Trust Fund under subsection (c) or (d) of this section, that person, at the request of the claimant, shall transmit the claim and supporting documents to the Trust Fund. The Secretary may, by regulation, prescribe the documents to be so transmitted and the terms under which they are to be transmitted.

(f)(1) The Secretary, in consultation with the Trust Fund, shall establish procedures and standards for the prompt appraisal and settlement of claims against the Trust Fund.

(2) The Trust Fund may use the facilities and services of private insurance and claims adjusting organizations or State agencies in processing claims against the Trust Fund and may contract for those facilities and services.

(3) To the extent necessitated by extraordinary circumstances, where the services of private organizations or State agencies are inadequate, the Trust Fund may use Federal personnel, on a reimbursable basis, to process claims against the Trust Fund.

(g) Any claimant, or any other person suffering legal wrong because of, or adversely affected or aggrieved by, a final determination of the Trust Fund with respect to a claim, may bring an action for judicial review of the determination. Such action shall be brought under section 609 and shall be the exclusive judicial remedy with respect to such final determination of the Trust Fund. Such an action shall be filed not later than thirty days after the Trust Fund issues notification of the final determination. Venue for any such action shall lie in any district wherein the claimant resides, in addition to any district described in section 609(b). The final determination of the Trust Fund shall not be held unlawful or set aside unless the reviewing court finds such determination to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.

ACTIONS TO ENFORCE LIABILITY

SEC. 608. (a)(1) In any action brought under this title against a responsible party or guarantor, both the plaintiff and defendant shall serve a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings therein upon the Trust Fund at the same time those pleadings are served upon the opposing parties.

(2) The Trust Fund may intervene as a party as a matter of right in any action in which a complaint has been served upon it under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(3) In any action to which the Trust Fund is a party, if the responsible party or his guarantor admits liability under this title, the Trust Fund shall be dismissed therefrom to the extent of the admitted liability.

(4) If the Trust Fund has been served a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings in an action referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Trust Fund shall be bound by any judgment entered therein, whether or not the Trust Fund was a party to the action.

(5) If neither the plaintiff nor the defendant serves a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleading upon the Trust Fund in an action referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the limitation of liability otherwise permitted by subsection (b) of section 604 of this title is not available to the defendant, and the plaintiff shall not recover from the Trust Fund any sums not paid by the defendant.

(b) In any action brought against the Trust Fund, the plaintiff may join any responsible party or his guarantor, and the Trust Fund may implead any person, who is or may be liable to the Trust Fund.

(c) No claim may be presented, nor may any action be commenced for damages recoverable under this title, unless that claim is presented to, or that action is commenced against a responsible party or his guarantor or against the Trust Fund, as to their respective liabilities, within three years from the date of discovery of the economic loss for which a claim may be asserted under subsection (a) of section 603 of this title, or within six years of the date of the incident which resulted in that loss, whichever is earlier.

(d) Any person, including the Trust Fund, who compensates any claimant for an economic loss, compensable under 603, shall be subrogated to all rights, claims, and causes of action which that claimant has under this title.

(e) In any claim or action by the Trust Fund against any responsible party or guarantor under subsection (d), the Trust Fund shall recover—

(1) for a claim presented to the Trust Fund (where there has been a denial of source designation) under section 607(b)(1), or (where there has been denial of liability) under section 607(c)(1)—

(A) subject only to the limitation of liability to which the defendant is entitled under section 604(b), the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant, without reduction;

(B) interest on that amount, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 604(e), from the date upon which the claim was presented by the defendant to the date upon which the Trust Fund is paid by the defendant, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the Trust Fund shall offer to the claimant the amount finally paid by the Trust Fund to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim against the Trust Fund to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that offer, inclusive;

(C) all costs incurred by the Trust Fund by reason of the claim, both of the claimant against the Trust Fund and the Trust Fund against the defendant, including, but not limited to, processing costs, investigating costs, court costs, and attorney's fees; and

(2) for a claim presented to the Trust Fund under section 607(c)(2)—

(A) in which the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant exceeds the largest amount, if any, the defendant offered to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim of the claimant against the defendant—

(i) subject to dispute by the defendant as to any excess over the amount offered to the claimant by the defendant, the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant;

(ii) interest, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 604(e), for the period specified in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection; and

(iii) all costs incurred by the Trust Fund by reason of the claim of the Trust Fund against the defendant, including, but not limited to, processing costs, investigation costs, court costs, and attorney's fees; or

(B) in which the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant is less than or equal to the largest amount the defendant offered to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim of the claimant against the defendant—

(i) the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant, without reduction;

(ii) interest, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 604(e), from the date upon which the claim was presented by the claimant to the defendant to the date upon which the defendant offered to the claimant the largest amount referred to in this subclause, except that if the defendant tendered the offer of the largest amount referred to in this subparagraph within sixty days after the date upon which the claim of the claimant was either presented to the defendant or advertising was commenced under section 106, the defendant shall not be liable for interest for that period; and

(iii) interest from the date upon which the claim of the Trust Fund against the defendant was presented to the defendant to the date upon which the Trust Fund is paid, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the defendant shall offer to the Trust Fund the amount finally paid to the Trust Fund in satisfaction of the claim of the Trust Fund to the date upon which the Trust Fund shall accept that offer, inclusive.

(f) The Trust Fund shall pay over to the claimant that portion of any interest the Trust Fund shall recover, under subsections (e)(10) and (e)(2)(A) for the period from the date upon which the claim of the claimant was presented to the defendant to the date upon which the claimant was paid by the Trust Fund, inclusive, less from the date upon which the Trust Fund offered to the claimant the amount finally paid to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that offer, inclusive.

(g) The Trust Fund is entitled to recover for all interest and costs specified in subsection (e) without regard to any limitation of liability to which the defendant may otherwise be entitled.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

SEC. 609. (a) The United States district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction over all controversies arising under titles VI, VII, and VIII of this Act, without regard to the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy.

(b) Unless otherwise provided in this Act, venue shall lie in any district wherein the injury complained of occurred, or wherein the defendant resides, may be found, or has his principal office. For purposes of this section, the Trust Fund shall reside in the District of Columbia.

RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAW

SEC. 610. (a) Except as provided in this title—

(1) no action may be brought in any court of the United States, or of any State or political subdivision thereof, for an economic loss compensable under this title,

(2) no person may be required to contribute to any fund, the purpose of which is to compensate for damages for an economic loss described in section 603(a), except that, for a period of three years beginning on the effective date of this section, any State which on the effective date of this section has in effect a statute that requires such contributions may continue to require such contributions within the limits established by such statute as those limits exist on such date, and

(3) no person may be required to establish or maintain evidence of financial responsibility relating ot the satisfaction of a claim compensable under this title.

(b) Nothing in this Act shall preclude any State from imposing a tax or fee upon any person or upon oil in order to finance the purchase and prepositioning of oil pollution cleanup and removal equipment or to finance other preparations for responding to a discharge of oil which affects such State.

(c) Nothing in subsection (a) shall prohibit an action by the Trust Fund under any other provision of law to recover compensation paid under this title.

PENALTIES

SEC. 611. Any person who, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, is found to have failed to comply with the requirements of section 605 of this title or the regulations issued thereunder or with any denial or detention order shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty, not to exceed $10,000 for each violation. The amount of the civil penalty shall be assessed by the Secretary by written notice. In determining the amount of such penalty, the Secretary shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the prohibited acts committed and, with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require. The Secretary may compromise, modify, or remit with or without conditions, any civil penalty which is subject to imposition or which has been imposed under this section. If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become final, the Secretary may refer the matter to the Attorney General for collection.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 612. There are authorized to be appropriated for those fiscal years which begin on or after October 1, 1984, such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act.

TITLE VII.—COMPREHENSIVE OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY TRUST FUND

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COMPREHENSIVE OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY TRUST FUND

SEC. 701. (a) The Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund is established as a nonprofit corporate entity. The Trust Fund shall consist of—

(1) fees paid into the Trust Fund under section 702,

(2) amounts recovered or collected on behalf of the Trust Fund under title VI of this Act, and

(3) amounts transferred to the Trust Fund under sections 802(f) and 802(g) of this Act.

(b) The Trust Fund shall be administered by a Board of Directors under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

(c)(1) The Board of Directors shall consist of nine voting directors appointed by the Secretary as follows—

(A) three shall be representatives of persons who are liable for fees imposed under this title;

(B) three shall be individuals (including but not limited to, representatives of any State or political subdivision thereof) who are potential claimants under paragraph (2), (4), or (5) of section 603(b) of this Act; and

(C) three shall be individuals from the general public, who are not eligible for appointment under subparagraph (A), and who have particular expertise, knowledge, and experience in the field of oil spill liability and compensation (including, but not limited to, environmental or labor representatives or guarantors).

(2) Not more than five voting directors shall be members of any one political party. All directors shall be citizens of the United States.

(3) The term of office of each director shall be six years, except that of the directors first appointed three shall be appointed for terms of two years, three shall be appointed for terms of four years, and three shall be apppointed for terms of six years. Any director appointed to fill a vacancy occuring before the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of that term.

(4) The Secretary or his delegate shall serve as a nonvoting member of the Board of Directors.

(5) The levels of compensation of the Board of Directors shall be fixed initially by the Secretary and may be adjusted from time to time upon recommendation by the Board of Directors and concurrence of the Secretary. Any member of the Board of Directors who is an officer or employee of the United States, and any other member of the Board of Directors who is prohibited by the terms of his employment from receiving additional compensation, shall receive no additional compensation on account of that member's service on the Board of Directors.

(6) Any director may be removed from office by the Secretary only for neglect of duty, malfeasance in office, or incompetence, or if the director no longer qualifies to be a director under paragraph (1).

(7) The Board of Directors shall meet at least once a year. A majority of the voting members of the Board of Directors shall constitute a quorum, and any action by the Board of Directors shall be effected by majority vote of the voting members of the Board of Directors.

(8) All meetings of the Board of Directors held to conduct official business of the Trust Fund shall be open to public observation and shall be preceded by reasonable public notice. The Board of Directors may close a meeting if the meeting is likely to disclose—

(A) information the premature disclosure of which would be likely to lead to speculation in investments of the Trust Fund; or

(B) information which is likely to adversely affect financial or securities markets or institutions.

(9) The determination to close any meeting of the Board of Directors for any of the purposes specified in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (7) shall be made in a meeting of the Board of Directors open to public observation preceded by reasonable notice. The Board of Directors shall prepare minutes of any meeting which is closed to the public and such minutes shall be made promptly available to the public, except for those portions thereof which, in the judgment of the Board of Directors, may be withheld under the provisions of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (7).

(d)(1) The Board of Directors shall appoint a chief executive officer of the Trust Fund who shall be responsible for the administration of the Trust Fund.

The Board of Directors shall—

(A) established the offices and appoint the officers of the Trust Fund and define their duties;

(B) fix the compensation of individual officer positions and categories of other employees of the Trust Fund taking into consideration the rates of compensation in effect under the Executive Schedule and the General Schedule prescribed by subchapter II and III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code for comparable positions or categories. If the Board of Directors determines that it is necessary to fix the compensation of any officer position or category of other positions at a rate or rates in excess of that prescribed for level I of the Executive Schedule under section 5312 of title 5, the Board of Directors may transmit to the Secretary its recommendations with respect to the rates of compensation it deems advisable for such positions and categories. Such recommendations shall become effective at the beginning of the first pay period which begins after the thirtieth day following the transmittal of such recommendations unless the Secretary has specifically disapproved such recommendation and notified the Board of Directors to such effect; and

(C) provide a system of organization to fix responsibility and promote efficiency.

(3) Except as specifically provided herein, directors, officers, and employees of the Trust Fund shall not be subject to any law of the United States relating to governmental employment.

(4) The chief executive officer shall appoint such employees as may be necessary for the transaction of the Trust Fund's business to, and may discharge such employees from, positions established in accordance with this section.

(5) No political test or qualification shall be used in selecting, appointing, promoting, or taking other personnel actions with respect to officers, agents, and employees of the Trust Fund, except as provided in subsection (c)(1) of this section.

(6) The Board of Directors may provide for reimbursement of directors, officers, and employees for travel expenses and per diem.

(e) The Trust Fund and its income and property shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, except that—

(1) any real property owned in fee by the Trust Fund shall be subject to State, territorial, county, municipal, or other local taxation to the same extent, according to its value, as other similarly situated and used real property, without discrimination in the valuation, classification, or assessment thereof; and

(2) the Trust Fund and its employees shall be subject to any nondiscriminatory payroll and employment taxes intended to finance benefits based upon employment (such as social security and unemployment benefits) to the same extent as any privately owned corporation.

(f) The Trust Fund shall have the power to sue and be sued in its own name and to exercise all other lawful powers necessarily or reasonably related to the establishment of the Trust Fund and the exercise of its functions and duties under this Act.

(g)(1) The Trust Fund shall have an independent annual audit prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles.

(2) Not later than one hundred and twenty days after the end of each fiscal year of the Trust Fund, the Trust Fund shall submit to the Congress and the Secretary an annual report containing the audit prepared under paragraph (1) and information regarding the organization, procedures, and activities of the Trust Fund during the preceding fiscal year.

(h) The principal office of the Trust Fund shall be located in the District of Columbia.

(i) Except to the extent expressly provided herein, the Trust Fund shall not be deemed to be an agency of the United States or an instrumentality of the United States.

(j) This title shall be considered the articles of incorporation for the Trust Fund.

FUND COLLECTIONS

SEC. 702. (a) A fee of 1.3 cents a barrel shall be paid into the Trust Fund by the owner of—

(1) oil received at a United States refinery;

(2) oil entered into the United States for consumption, use, or warehousing; and

(3) oil produced from a well located in the United States which is used in or exported from the United States.

(b) The Secretary, in consultation with the Trust Fund, shall by regulation establish procedures for the collection of the fee imposed by subsection (a).

(c) The fee imposed by subsection (a) shall only be in effect during those times when the amount in the Trust Fund (including the value of any securities held by the Trust Fund pursuant to section 703(b)) is less than $200,000,000.

(d) No fee shall be collected under this section with respect to any oil if the person who would be liable for the fee establishes that a prior fee has been imposed by this section with respect to that oil.

(e) The Trust Fund may bring an action in the district court of the United States for the collection of any fee required to be paid under this section.

(f) Any person who fails to collect or pay any fee as required by this section shall be liable for a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000, to be assessed by the Secretary of Transportation, in addition to the fee required to be collected or paid and the interest on such fee in an amount equal to the amount such fee would have earned if collected or paid when due and invested in accordance with subsection (b) of section 703. Upon the failure of any person so liable to pay any penalty, fee, or interest upon demand, the Attorney General may, at the request of the Secretary of Transportation, bring an action in the name of the Fund against that person for such amount.

TRUST FUND DISBURSEMENT AND INVESTMENT

SEC. 703. (a) The Trust Fund shall be available, subject to appropriations, for the purposes of—

(1) immediate payment of removal costs described in section 601(b)(24)(A) and of reasonable costs incurred by the trustee under section 603(a)(3) in assessing damaged natural resources and preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged natural resources;

(2) the payment of claims under title VI of this Act for damage which is not otherwise compensated;

(3) the costs of administration of this Act; and

(4) the payment of initial and annual contributions to the International Fund in accordance with section 904 of this Act.

(b) All sums not needed for purposes of subsection (a) shall be invested prudently in income producing securities approved by the Secretary in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary. Income from these securities shall be added to the principal of the Trust Fund, except that whenever the amount in the Trust Fund (including the value of such securities) exceeds $300,000,000, the amount of any income from such securities shall be rebated, subject to appropriations, on a pro rata basis to the owners of the oil who contributed fees to the Trust Fund. If any owner no longer exists or income cannot otherwise be rebated after the diligence to do so, the income shall be retained by the Trust Fund.

LIMITATION ON PAYMENT OF CLAIMS BY THE TRUST FUND

SEC. 704. (a) No amount in the Trust Fund may be used to pay any claim, other than a claim for removal costs, to the extent that the payment of that claim would reduce the amount in the Trust Fund to an amount less than $30,000,000.

(b) If at any time the Trust Fund is unable by reason of subsection (a) to pay all of the claims, other than for removal costs, payable at that time, those claims shall, to the extent permitted under subsection (a), be paid in full in the order in which they were finally determined. Subject to approval of the Secretary, the Trust Fund may borrow amounts from any commerical credit source, at the best available terms, for purposes of paying such claims in such order.

(c) The liability of the Trust Fund under this Act with respect to one incident shall not exceed $100,000,000. If the Trust Fund is unable by reason of the preceding sentence to pay all claims with respect to the incident, the claims shall be reduced proportionately.

ANNUAL AUDIT REVIEW

SEC. 705. The Comptroller General shall review the audit required by section 701(g)(1) and shall submit a report of its review to Congress.

COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS OF THIS ACT

SEC. 706. (a) If any provision of this Act provides that the balance in any fund (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as the "transferor fund") is to be transferred to the Trust Fund, any claim which arises before October 1, 1984 (to the extent such claim would have been payable out of the transferor fund), shall be payable, subject to appropriations, out of the Trust Fund notwithstanding any of the limitations imposed by this title.

(b)(1) If the Secretary or his delegate determines that there is a TAP fund deficit, the fee imposed by section 702(a) on oil first transported through the Trans-Alaska Pipeline after the date of such determination shall be increased by 2 cents per barrel until the total amount of the increased fees equals such deficit.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the term "TAP fund deficit" means the excess (if any) of—

(A) the amount certified by the Secretary of the Interior as the total amount of the claims outstanding against the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund under section 802(b)(2) of this Act, over

(B) the total amount of the assets of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund as of the effective date of this section.

DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES

SEC. 707. (a) For purposes of this title, the term "United States" includes the outer Continental Shelf and any foreign trade zone of the United States.

(b) In the case of any United States refinery which produces natural gasoline from natural gas, the gasoline so produced shall be treated as received at the refinery at the time so produced.

(c) In the case of a fraction of a barrel, the fee imposed by section 702(a) of this title shall be the same fraction of the amount of the fee imposed on a whole barrel.

TITLE VIII—REGULATION, EFFECTIVE DATES, AND SAVINGS PROVISIONS

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 801. (a) This section, section 601, section 602, section 612, title VII (other than section 702 (a), (c), (d), (e), and (f), section 703, and section 704), section 803, and each provision of title VI that authorizes the promulgation of regulations shall be effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) Title IX shall take effect on the first date on which both the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage and the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage are in force with respect to the United States.

(c) All other provisions of titles VI through IX and the regulations issued threunder, shall be effective on the one hundred and eightieth day after the date of enactment of this Act, except that the panalty prescribed by section 611 for failure to comply with the requirements of section 605 or the regulations issued thereunder shall not be effective until the ninetieth day after issuance of those regulations or the two hundred and seventieth day after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is earlier.

(d) Any regulation respecting financial responsibility, issued pursuant to any provision of law repeated by section 802 of this title, and to effect on the day immediately preceding the effective date of section 802 of this title shall remain in force until superseded by regulations issued under title VI of this Act.

CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 802. (a) The first sentence of subsection (b) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act (43 U.S.C. 1653(b); 87 Stat. 586) is amended by inserting "in the State of Alaska" after "any area" and by inserting "related to the trans-Alaska oil pipeline" after "any activities". Such subsection is further amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "This subsection shall not apply to removal costs resulting from oil pollution as that term is defined in section 601(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(b)(1) Subsection (c) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act is repealed. All assets of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund, as of the effective date of this section, except for assets equal to the total amount of claims certified by the Secretary under paragraph (2) of this subsection, shall be rebated, subject to appropriations, directly to the operator of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline for payment on a pro rata basis to the owners of the oil at the time it was loaded on the vessel. The Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund under terms of subsection (c) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, and shall assume all liability incurred by the officers or trustees in the execution of their duties involving the Tans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund, other than the liability of those officers or trustees for gross negligence or willful misconduct.

(2) The Secretary of the Interior shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the total amount of the claims outstanding against the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund not later than one hundred and eighty days after the effective date of this section. In the event that the total amount of the actual claims settled is less than the total amount of the outstanding claims certified, the difference between these amounts shall be rebated directly to the operator of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline for payment, on a pro rata basis, to the owners of the oil at the time it was loaded on the vessel.

(c) Section 17 of the Intervention on the High Seas Act (33 U.S.C. 1488; 88 Stat. 10) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. The fund established under title VII of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act shall be available to the Secretary for actions and activities relating to oil pollution (as defined in section 601(b) of that Act) taken under section 5 of this Act. The fund established under section 311(k) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act shall be available for actions and activities relating to other pollution taken under section 5 of this Act.".

(d) Section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (17) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following new paragraph:

"(18) 'person in charge' means the individual immediately responsible for the operation of a vessel or facility.".

(2) Paragraph (5) of subsection (b) is amended in the last sentence by inserting after "person" the following: "or his employer".

(3) Subparagraph (A) of paragraph (6) of subsection (b) is amended—

(A) in the first and second sentences, by striking out "or person in charge" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "person in charge, or employer of such person in charge"; and

(B) in the third sentence, by striking out "the owner or operator" and inserting in lieu thereof "whoever being".

(4) Subparagraph (B) of paragraph (6) of subsection (b) is amended in the first and second sentences by striking out "or person in charge" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "person in charge, or employer of such person in charge".

(5) Subsection (c)(2)(H) is amended by striking out "from the fund established under subsection (k) of this section for the reasonable costs incurred in such removal" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "for the reasonable costs incurred in such removal (i) from the fund established under section 701 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act in the case of any discharge from a vessel of petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom, or from a facility (as defined by title VI of such Act of (ii) from the fund established under subsection (k) of this section in any other case".

(6)(A) Subsection (d) is amended by inserting immediately before the last sentence the following: "Any expense incurred under this subsection or under the Intervention on the High Seas Act (or the convention defined in section 2(3) thereof) as the result of the discharge or imminent discharge from a vessel of petroleum, including crude oil or any faction or residue therefrom, shall be reimbursed from the fund established under section 701 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(B) Subsection (d) is further amended by striking out "Any" in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "Any other".

(7) Subsection (f)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the first place it appears and by striking out "carrying oil" and inserting in lieu thereof "carrying such oil".

(8) Subsection (f)(3) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined by section 601(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the first place it appears.

(9)(A) The first sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the second place it appears, by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 601(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the first place it appears.

(B) The second sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 601(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the second place it appears.

(C) The third sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "such" before "oil" the first place it appears and by striking out "carrying oil" and inserting in lieu thereof "carrying such oil".

(10)(A) Subsection (i)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 601(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the second place it appears.

(B) Subsection (i)(2) is repealed and paragraph (3) of subsection (i) (and all references thereto) is redesignated as paragraph (2).

(11) Subsection (p)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the first place it appears.

(e) The Deepwater Port Act of 1974 (33 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.; 88 Stat. 2126) is amended as follows:

(1) Section 4(c)(1) is amended by striking out "section 18(l) of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 605 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act".

(2) Subsections (b), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (l), and (n) of section 18 are repealed.

(3) Paragraph (3) of subsection (c) of section 18 is amended by striking out "Deepwater Port Liability Fund established pursuant to subsection (f) of this section." and inserting in lieu thereof "fund established under title VII of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(4) Subsection (k) of section 18 is amended to read as follows:

"(k) This section shall not be interpreted to preclude any State from imposing additional requirements, not inconsistent with the provisions of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act, for any discharge of oil from a deepwater port or a vessel within any safety zone.".

(5) Subsections (c), (k), and (m) of section 18 are redesignated as subsections (b), (c), and (d), respectively.

(f) Any amounts remaining in the Deepwater Port Liability Fund established by section 18(f) of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 shall, subject to appropriations, be deposited in the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund established by title VII of this Act. The Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Deepwater Port Liability Fund under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974.

(g) Title III of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978 (Public Law 95-372) is repealed. Any amounts remaining in the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund established under section 302 of that title shall be, subject to appropriations, deposited in the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund established by title VII of this Act. The Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund under title III of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 803. If any provision of this Act or the applicability thereof is held invalid, the remainder of this Act shall not be affected thereby.

TITLE IX—IMPLEMENTATION OF CONVENTIONS

RECOGNITION OF THE INTERNATIONAL FUND

SEC. 901. The International Oil Pollution Compensation Fund (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "International Fund") established by article 2 of the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "International Fund Convention") is recognized under the laws of the United States as a legal person and shall have the capacity under the laws of the United States to contract, to acquire and dispose of real and personal property, and to institute and be a party to legal proceedings. The Director of the International Fund is recognized as the legal representative of the International Fund. The Director shall be deemed to have appointed irrevocably the Secretary of State his agent for service of process in any action against the International Fund in any court in the United States.

SERVICE OF PROCESS AND INTERVENTION

SEC. 902. (a) In any action brought in a court in the United States against the owner of a ship or his guarantor under the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "Civil Liability Convention"), the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, shall serve a copy of the complaint and any subsequent pleading therein upon the International Fund and the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund at the same time the complaint or other pleading is served upon the opposing parties.

(b) The International Fund may intervene as a party as a matter of right in any action brought in a court in the United States against the owner of a ship or his guarantor under the Civil Liability Convention.

(c) If the International Fund has been served a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings in an action referred to in subsection (a) of this section, the International Fund shall be bound by any judgment entered therein, whether or not the International Fund was a party to the action.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION

SEC. 903. The International Fund and its assets shall be exempt from all direct taxation in the United States.

PAYMENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS

SEC. 904. The amount of any initial or annual contribution to the International Fund which is required to be made under article 10 of the International Fund Convention by any person with respect to oil received in any port, terminal installation, or other installation located in the United States shall be paid to the International Fund by the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund. Before the International Convention enters into force with respect to the United States, the President shall make, and deposit with the Secretary-General of the International Maritime Organization, a declaration under article 14 of the International Fund Convention that the United States assumes the obligation to pay contributions under article 10 of such Convention in respect of oil received within the territory of the United States and that such amount will be paid from the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund.

JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURTS

SEC. 905 (a) The United States district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of—

(1) all controversies arising in the territory, including the territorial sea, of the United States under the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention, and without regard to the citizenship or the parties or the amount in controversy.

(b) Venue shall lie in any district wherein the injury complained of occurred, or wherein the defendant resides. may be found, or has his principal office. For purposes of this subsection, the International Fund shall reside in the District of Columbia.

RECOGNITION OF JUDGMENTS

SEC. 906. Any final judgment of a court of any nation which is a party to the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention in an action for compensation under either such convention shall be recognized by any court of the United States or of a State when that judgment has become enforceable in such nation and is no longer subject to ordinary forms of review, except where—

(1) the judgment was obtained by fraud; or

(2) the defendant was not given reasonable notice and a fair opportunity to present his case.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

SEC. 907. (a) The owner of each ship which is documented under the laws of the United States and is carrying more than two thousand tons of oil in bulk as cargo shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility in amounts sufficient to cover the maximum liability of such owner for pollution damage arising from one incident under the Civil Liability Convention. The Secretary shall issue a certificate to each such owner who complies with this paragraph, in the form and manner required by the Civil Liability Convention.

(b) With respect to any ship owned by the United States, the Secretary shall issue a certificate stating that the ship is owned by the United States and that the ship's liability is covered within the limits of liability prescribed by the Civil Liability Convention.

(c) The owner of each ship (other than a ship to which subsection (a) or (b) applies), wherever registered, which is carrying more than two thousand tons of oil in bulk as cargo and which enters or leaves a port or offshore terminal in the United States (including the territorial seas) shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility in amounts sufficient to cover the maximum liability of such owner for pollution damage arising from one incident under the Civil Liability Convention. The owner of a ship which is registered in, or flying the flag of, a nation which is a party to the Civil Liability Convention shall be considered to have met the requirements of this paragraph if the ship is carrying a certificate issued by such nation attesting that insurance or other financial security is in force which meets the requirements of such Convention.

(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall withhold or revoke the clearance required by section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of any ship which does not have a certificate showing compliance with the requirements of financial responsibility under subsection (a) or (c) of this section.

(e) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may (1) deny entry to any facility, to any port or place in the United States, or to the navigable waters, or (2) detain at the facility or at the port or place in the United States, any vessel subject to this section that, upon request, does not produce the certificate required under this section or regulations issued hereunder.

(f) Any person who, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, is found to have failed to comply with the requirements of this section or the regulations issued under this section or with any denial or detention order shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty, not to exceed $10,000 for each violation. The amount of the civil penalty shall be assessed by the Secretary by written notice. In determining the amount of such penalty, the Secretary shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the prohibited acts committed and, with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require. The Secretary may compromise, modify, or remit with or without conditions any civil penalty which is subject to imposition or which has been imposed under this subsection. If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become final, the Secretary may refer the matter to the Attorney General for collection.

WAIVER OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY

SEC. 908. The United States waives all defenses based on its status as a sovereign State with respect to any controversy arising under the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention relating to any ship owned by the United States and used for commercial purposes.

DEFINITION OF FRANC

SEC. 909. Notwithstanding any provision of the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention to the contrary, one franc equals one-fifteenth of a special drawing right, as defined by the International Monetary Fund, for purposes of applying such conventions.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 910. The Secretary may issue such rules and regulations as are necessary to implement the Civil Liability Convention and the International Fund Convention.

(2) On page 14, delete lines 7-24, on page 15, delete lines 1-13 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "is applicable to the hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant concerned, the remedial action selected under this paragraph or secured under section 106(a) shall be based upon the relevant health and environmental standards and criteria developed by the Administrator under such programs.

"(iii) Where the remedial action taken under this subtitle at any facility does not include the removal from such facility of all hazardous substances subject to regulation under Subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, any remedial action providing for the containment of any such substance at such facility shall comply with the standards applicable to facilities required to obtain permits under section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(iv) The Administrator may waive the application of the requirements of clause (iii) with respect to any facility and select alternative remedial action which does not comply with such requirements if the Administrator finds that such alternative remedial action—

"(I) will provide protection of human health and the environment substantially equivalent to the remedial action which would be necessary to comply with such requirements; or

"(II) compliance with the requirements of clause (iii) at that facility will consume such a disproportionate share of the Fund resource as to have the effect of deferring or preventing remedial action at other facilities which pose a significantly greater threat to human health and the environment.

If the Administrator exercises the authority granted pursuant to clause (iv), or selects or secures a remedial action pursuant to clause (ii) of the paragraph that does not require the application of a level or standard of control that has been determined to be equivalent to the most stringent relevant health and environmental standard or criteria, the Administrator shall publish a notice explaining the basis for the remedial action selected.".

TITLE II—FEDERAL CAUSE OF ACTION

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 201. For purposes of this title—

(1) The term "medical costs" means the costs of all appropriate medical, surgical, hospital, nursing care, ambulance, and other related services, drugs, medicines, as appropriate for both diagnosis and treatment, and any rehabilitative programs within the scope of section 103 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 723).

(2) The term "dependent" means with respect to any decreased person the individual or individuals referred to in section 8110 of title 5 of the United States Code.

(3) The terms "Administrator", "act of God", "hazardous substance", "release" "federally permitted release", and "facility" shall have the same meaning when used in this title as when used in the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980.

(4) The terms "treatment", "storage", and "disposal" (and related terms such as "treat", "store", and "dispose of") shall have the same meaning when used in this title as when used in the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

SUBTITLE A—FEDERAL CAUSE OF ACTION LIABILITY

SEC. 202. (a) GENERAL RULE.—Notwithstanding any other provision or rule of law, and subject only to the defenses set forth in subsection (b)(2)—

(1) the owner and operator of a vessel (otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the United States) or a facility,

(2) any person who at the time of disposal of a hazardous substance owned or operated the facility at which such hazardous substance was disposed of,

(3) any person who by contract, agreement, or otherwise arranged for disposal or treatment, or arranged with a transporter for transport for disposal or treatment, of a hazardous substance owned or possessed by such person, by any other party or entity, at any facility owned or operated by another party or entity, at any facility owned or operated by another party or entity and containing such hazardous substance, and

(4) any person who accepts or accepted a hazardous substance for transport to disposal or treatment facilities or sites selected by such person, shall be liable to any individual (or his dependents) for damages to such individual which are compensable under this title and which result from harm caused by a release (excluding a federally permitted release) of such hazardous substance from such facility.

(b) STRICT; JOINT AND SEVERAL.—The liability of any person under this title shall be strict. Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, such liability shall be joint and several. Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect the equitable powers of apportionment of any court following an adjudication of liability.

(2) Liability among joint defendants shall be determined on the basis of each joint defendant's percentage of responsibility for the cause of the plaintiff's damages, except that when the court determines that all or part of the amount for which another joint defendant is responsible is uncollectible from that joint defendant the court shall reallocate any uncollectible amount among the other joint defendants, according to their comparative percentages of responsibility. The joint defendant whose responsibility is reallocated is nonetheless subject to contribution and to any continuing liability to the plaintiff.

(3) There shall be no liability under subsection (a) to the extent that any defendant can establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the exposure to a hazardous substance or the damage resulting from such exposure, was caused by—

(A) an act of God;

(B) an act of war;

(C) the negligence of the plaintiff;

(D) an act or omission of a third party other than an employee or agent of the defendant, or than one whose act or omission occurs in connection with a contractual relationship, existing directly or indirectly, with the defendant (except where the sole contractual arrangement arises from a published tariff and acceptance for carriage by a common carrier by rail), if the defendant establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that (i) he exercised due care with respect to the hazardous substance concerned, taking into consideration the characteristics of such hazardous substance, in light of all relevant facts and circumstances, and (ii) he took precautions against foreseeable acts or omissions of any such third party and the consequences that could foreseeably result from such acts or omissions; or

(E) any combination of the foregoing subparagraphs.

—On page 1, line 2, strike "This Act" and insert in lieu thereof "Titles I through V".

At the end of the bill, add the following:

TITLE VI—OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY AND COMPENSATION

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 601. Titles VI through VIII may be cited as the "Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act."

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 602. For the purposes of this Act, the term—

(1) "barrel" means forty-two United States gallons at sixty degrees Fahrenheit;

(2) "claim" means a demand in writing for a sum certain;

(3) "cleanup costs" means costs of reasonable measures taken, after an incident has occurred, to prevent, minimize, or mitigate oil pollution from that incident;

(4) "discharge" means any emission, international or unintentional, and includes spilling, leaking, pumping, pouring, emptying, or dumping;

(5) "facility" means a structure, or group of structures, which is either—

(A) located, in whole or in part on the outer Continental Shelf and used for the purposes of exploring for, drilling for, producing, storing, handling, transferring, processing, or transporting oil produced from the outer Continental Shelf or

(B) licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974;

(6) "foreign claimant" means any person residing in a foreign country, the government of a foreign country, or any agency or political subdivision thereof, who asserts a claim;

(7) "guarantor" means the person, other than the responsible party, who provides evidence of financial responsibility for a responsible party;

(8) "incident" means any occurrence or series of occurrences having the same origin, involving one or more vessels, facilities, or any combination thereof, which causes, or poses a substantial threat, of oil pollution;

(9) "inland oil barge" means a non-self-propelled vessel, carrying oil in bulk as cargo or in residue from cargo and certificated to operate only on the internal waters of the United States while operating in such waters;

(10) "internal waters of the United States" means those waters of the United States lying inside the baseline from which the territorial sea is measured and those waters outside that baseline which are a part of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway;

(11) "lessee" means a person holding a leasehold interest in an oil and gas lease on submerged lands of the outer Continental Shelf granted or maintained under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(12) "licensee" means a person holding a license issued under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974;

(13) "mobile offshore drilling unit" means every watercraft or other contrivance (other than a public vessel of the United States) capable of use as a means of transportation on water and as a means of drilling for oil on the outer Continental shelf;

(14) "natural resources" means living and nonliving resources belonging to, managed by, held in trust by, appertaining to, or otherwise controlled by the United States (including the resources of the fishery conservation zone established by the Fishery Conservation and Management Act of 1976), any State or local government, or any foreign government;

(15) "navigable waters" means the waters of the United States, including the territorial sea;

(16) "oil" means petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom;

(17) "oil pollution" means—

(A) the presence of oil which has been discharged from a vessel or facility in quantities which the President has determined may be harmful pursuant to paragraph (4) of subsection (b) of section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act—

(i) in or on the navigable waters or on land within the United States immediately adjacent thereto; or

(ii) in or on the waters of the contiguous zone established by the United States under article 24 of the Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone; or

(B) the presence of oil (other than natural seepage) in or on the waters of the high seas outside the territorial limits of the United States—

(i) when discharged in connection with activities conducted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(ii) when discharged from a deepwater port licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 or from a vessel transiting to or from a deepwater port and located in a safety zone of a deepwater port licensed under such Act;

(iii) causing injury to or loss of natural resources belonging to, appretaining to, or under the exclusive management authority of, the United States; or

(iv) when discharged, prior to being brought ashore in a port in the United States, from a ship that received oil at the terminal of the pipeline constructed under the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act (43 U.S.C. 1651 et seq.) for transportation to a port in the United States; or

(C) the presence of oil (other than natural seepage) in or on the territorial sea, internal waters, or adjacent shoreline, of a foreign country, in a case where damages are recoverable by a foreign claimant under section 603(b)(6) of this title; (18) "operator" means—

(A) in the case of a vessel, a charterer by demise or any other person, except the owner, who is responsible for the operation, manning, victualing, and supplying of the vessel; or

(B) in the case of a pipeline, any person, except the owner, who is responsible for the operation of such pipeline by agreement with the owner;

(19) "Outer Continental Shelf" has the meaning set forth in subsection (a) of section 2 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(20) "owner" means, in the case of a vessel or a pipeline, any person holding title to, or in the absence of title, any other indicia of ownership of, the vessel or pipeline, whether by lease, permit contract, license, or other form of agreement, except that such term does not include a person who, without participating in the management or operation of a vessel or a pipeline, holds indicia of ownership primarily to protect his security interest in the vessel or pipeline;

(21) "permittee" means a person holding an authorization, license, or permit for geological exploration issued under section 11 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(22) "person" means an individual, firm, corporation, association, partnership, consortium, joint venture, or any other commercial, legal, or governmental entity;

(23) "public vessel" means a vessel which—

(A) is owned or chartered by demise, and operated by (i) the United States, (ii) a State or political subdivision thereof, or (iii) a foreign government, and

(B) is not engaged in commercial service;

(24) "removal costs" means—

(A) costs incurred under subsection (c), (d), or (l) of section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, section 5 of the Intervention on the High Seas Act, or subsection (b) of sections 18 of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974, and

(B) cleanup costs, other than the costs described in subparagraph (A);

(25) "responsible party" means—

(A) with respect to a vessel or a pipeline, the owner or operator of such vessel or pipeline;

(B) with respect to a facility (other than a deepwater port or pipeline), the lessee or permittee of the area in which such facility is located, or the holder if a right of use and easement granted under the Outer Continental Shelf Act for the area in which such facililty is located where such holder is a different person than the lessee or permittee; and

(C) with respect to a deepwater port, the licensee;

(26) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation;

(27) "ship" means a vessel (other than an inland oil barge) carrying oil in bulk as cargo or in residue from cargo;

(28) "Trust Fund" means the fund established by section 701 of this Act;

(29) "United States" and "State" include the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, America Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States;

(30) "United States claimant" means any person residing in the United States, the Government of the United States or any agency thereof, or the government of a State or a political subdivision thereof, who asserts a claim; and

(31) "vessel" means every description of watercraft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water.

DAMAGES AND CLAIMANTS

SEC. 603. (a) Claims for damages for economic loss incurred on or after the effective date of this section and arising out of or directly resulting from oil pollution or the substantial threat of oil pollution, may be asserted for—

(1) removal costs;

(2) injury to, or destruction of, real or personal property;

(3) injury to, or destruction of, natural resources, including reasonable costs incurred by the trustee of the damaged resources in assessing both short-term and long-term injury to, or destruction of, the damaged resources, preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged resources, and restoring or acquiring the equivalent of the damaged resources;

(4) loss of subsistence use of natural resources;

(5) loss of profits or impairment of earning capacity due to injury or destruction of real or personal property or natural resources to the extent that such damages were sustained during the two-year period beginning on the date the claimant first suffered such loss; and

(6) loss of tax revenue for a period of one year due to injury to real or personal property.

(b)(1) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) by any claimant, except that the responsible party with respect to a vessel or facility involved in an incident may assert such a claim only if he can show that he is entitled to a defense to liability under section 604(c) of this title or, if not entitled to such a defense to liability, that he is entitled to a limitation of liability under section 604(b) of this title, in which case the claim may be asserted only to the extent that the sum of the removal costs incurred by the responsible party plus the amounts paid by the responsible party or by the guarantor on behalf of the responsible party for claims asserted under subsection (a) of this section exceeds the amount to which the total of the liability under section 604(a) and removal costs incurred by, or on behalf of, the responsible party is limited under section 604(b).

(2) A claim may be asserted under paragraphs (2) and (4) of subsection (a) by any United States claimant, if the property involved is owned or leased, or the natural resource involved is utilized, by the claimant.

(3) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (3) of subsection (a) by the President, as trustee for natural resources over which the United States Government has sovereign rights or exercises management authority, or by the Governor of any State for natural resources within the boundary of the State belonging to, managed by, controlled by, or appertaining to the State. Compensation paid under this paragraph may be used only for assessing both short-term and long-term injury to, or destruction of, the damaged resources, preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged resources, and restoring or acquiring the equivalent of the damaged resources.

(4) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (5) of subsection (a) by any United States claimant if the claimant derives at least 25 per centum of his earnings from activities which utilize the property or natural resource or, if such activities are seasonal in nature, 25 per centum of the claimant's earnings during the season in which such activities took place.

(5) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (6) of subsection (a) by any State or political subdivision thereof.

(6) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, a claim may be asserted under paragraphs (2), (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (a) by a foreign claimant to the same extent that a United States claimant may assert a claim if—

(A) the oil pollution occurred in the waters, including the territorial sea, or adjacent shoreline of a foreign country of which the claimant is a resident;

(B) the claimant is not otherwise compensated for his loss;

(C) the oil was discharged from a vessel located within the navigable waters, was discharged in connection with activities conducted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, or was discharged from a deepwater port licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 or a vessel transiting to or from a deepwater port and located in a safety zone of a deepwater port under such Act; and

(D) recovery is authorized by a treaty or an executive agreement between the United States and the foreign country of which the claimant is a resident, or the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Attorney General and other appropriate officials, certifies that such country provides a comparable remedy for United States claimants.

In the case of any oil pollution involving oil that has been transported through the pipeline constructed under the provisions of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, has been loaded on a vessel for transportation to a port in the United States, and is discharged from such vessel before being unloaded in that port, a claim may be asserted by a resident of Canada without regard to subparagraphs (A), (C), and (D) of this paragraph, to the same extent that a United States claimant may assert a claim.

(7) A claim may be asserted under any paragraph of subsection (a), by the Attorney General, on his own motion or at the request of the Secretary, on behalf of any group of United States claimants who may assert a claim under this subsection.

(c) If the Attorney General fails to act under paragraph (7) of subsection (b) within sixty days after the date on which the Secretary designates a source under section 606, any member of a group may assert a claim for damages on behalf of that group. Failure of the Attorney General to act shall have no bearing on any claim for damages asserted under this section.

LIABILITY

SEC. 604. (a)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection and subsections (b) and (c) of this section, the responsible party with respect to a facility or a vessel (other than a public vessel) that is the source of oil pollution, or poses a substantial threat of oil pollution in circumstances that justify the incurrence of the type of costs described in section 602(24)(A) of this title, shall be jointly, severally, and strictly liable for all damages for which a claim may be asserted under section 603.

(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, in any case in which a mobile offshore drilling unit is being used as a facility and is the source of oil pollution originating on or above the surface of the water or poses the substantial threat of such oil pollution, such unit shall be deemed to be a vessel which is a ship for purposes of this title.

(B) To the extent that damages for which claims may be asserted under section 603 from any incident described in subparagraph (A) exceed the amount for which the responsible party is liable under subparagraph (A) (as such amount may be limited under subsection (b)(2) of this section), the mobile offshore drilling unit shall be deemed to be a facility covered by subsection (b)(4) of this section, except that for purposes of applying subsection (b)(4) the amount specified in such subsection shall be reduced by the amount for which the responsible party with respect to a ship is liable under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

(C) In the case of any incident described in subparagraph (A) which is caused primarily by willful misconduct or gross negligence within the privity or knowledge of both the owner or operator of the mobile offshore drilling unit and the lessee or permittee of the area, or holder of a right of use or easement for the area, in which such unit is located; or which is caused primarily by a violation within the privity or knowledge of both such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder of applicable safety, construction, or operating standards or regulations of the United States; or with respect to which both such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder fail or refuse to report the incident where required by law or to provide all reasonable cooperation and assistance requested by the responsible Federal official in furtherance of cleanup activities, such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder shall be jointly, severally, and strictly liable (without limitation under subsection (b)) for all loss for which a claim may be asserted under section 603 of this title.

(b) Except when the incident is caused primarily by willful misconduct or gross negligence within the privity or knowledge of a responsible party, or is caused primarily by a violation within the privity or knowledge of a responsible party of applicable safety, construction, or operating standards or regulations of the United States; and except when a responsible party fails or refuses to report the incident where required by law or to provide all reasonable cooperation and assistance requested by the responsible Federal official in furtherance of cleanup activities, the total of the liability under subsection (a) of this section and any removal costs incurred by, or on behalf of, such responsible party shall be limited to—

(1) in the case of a vessel other than a ship or an inland oil barge, $150 per gross ton;

(2) in the case of a ship, $1,000,000 or $400 per gross ton, whichever is greater (but not to exceed $40,000,000);

(3) in the case of an inland oil barge, $150,000 or $150 per gross ton, whichever is greater; or

(4) in the case of a facility, $50,000,000.

The Secretary shall, from time to time, report to Congress on the desirability of adjusting the limitations of liability specified in this subsection.

(c)(1) Except when the responsible party has failed or refused to report an incident where required by law, there shall be no liability under subsection (a) of this section if such responsible party proves that the incident—

(A) resulted from an act of war, hostilities, civil war, insurrection, or a natural phenomenon of an exceptional, inevitable, and irresistible character, or

(B) was wholly caused by an act or omission of a person other than—

(i) a responsible party;

(ii) an employee or agent of a responsible party; or

(iii) one whose act or omission occurs in connection with a contractual relationship with a responsible party.

(2) There shall be no liability under subsection (a) of this section—

(A) as to a particular claimant, where the incident or economic loss is caused, in whole or in part, by the gross negligence or willful misconduct of that claimant; or

(B) as to a particular claimant, to the extent that the incident or economic loss is caused by the negligence of that claimant.

(d)(1) Except as provided in title VII the Trust Fund shall be liable for damages for which claims may be asserted under section 603 of this title and which are presented under this title, to the extent that the loss is not otherwise compensated.

(2) Except for the removal costs specified in section 602(24) (A) of this title, there shall be no liability under paragraph (1) of this subsection—

(A) where the incident is caused wholly by an act of war, hostilities, civil war, or insurrection;

(B) as to a particular claimant, where the incident or the economic loss is caused, in whole or in part, by the gross negligence or willful misconduct of that claimant; or

(C) as to a particular claimant, to the extent that the incident or the economic loss is caused by the negligence of that claimant.

(e)(1) In addition to the damages for which claims may be asserted under section 603 of this title, and without regard to any limitation of liability provided in subsection (b) of this section, the responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel, or his guarantor (subject to the guarantor's limitation set forth in subsection (d) of section 605 of this title), shall be liable to the claimant for interest on the amount paid in satisfaction of the claim for the period from the date upon which the claim was presented to the responsible party or guarantor to the date upon which the claimant is paid, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the responsible party or guarantor shall offer to the claimant an amount equal to or greater than that finally paid in satisfaction of the claim to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that amount, inclusive. However, if the responsible party or guarantor shall offer to the claimant, within sixty days of the date upon which the claim was presented, or of the date upon which advertising was commenced pursuant to section 606 of this title, whichever, is later, an amount equal to or greater than that finally paid in satisfaction of the claim, the responsible party or guarantor shall be liable for the interest provided in this paragraph only from the date the offer was accepted by the claimant to the date upon which payment is made to the claimant, inclusive.

(2) The interest provided in paragraph (1) shall be calculated at the average of the highest rate for commercial and finance company paper of maturities of one hundred and eighty days or less obtaining on each of the days included within the period for which interest must be paid to the claimant, as published in the Federal Reserve bulletin.

(f)(1) A responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel may not transfer the liability imposed under this section to any other person.

(2) Nothing in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall preclude an agreement whereby a person who, by an agreement with a responsible party with respect to a facility utilized in activities under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, is engaged in such activities, agrees to indemnify the responsible party for the liability imposed under subsection (a) of this section. Nothing in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall preclude an agreement whereby a person who owns or operates a towing vessel, by an agreement with a responsible party with respect to a non-self-propelled vessel, agrees to indemnify the responsible party for the liability imposed under subsection (a) of this section.

(g) Nothing in this title shall bar a cause of action that a responsible party subject to liability under this section or a guarantor has or would have by reason of subrogation or otherwise against any person.

(h) To the extent that it is in conflict with, or otherwise inconsistent with, any other law relating to liability or the limitation thereof, this section supersedes such other law.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

SEC. 605. (a)(1) The responsible party with respect to each vessel (except a public vessel or a non-self-propelled vessel that does not carry oil as cargo or fuel) over three hundred gross tons that uses a facility or the navigable waters shall establish an maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility sufficient to satisfy the maximum liability under section 604 of this title to which the responsible party would be exposed in a case where he would be entitled to limit his liability in accordance with subsection (b) of section 604 of this title. In cases where a responsible party owns or operates more than one vessel subject to this subsection, evidence of financial responsibility need be established only to meet the maximum liability applicable to the largest of such vessels.

(2) The Secretary of the Treasury shall withhold or revoke the clearance required by section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of any vessel subject to this subsection that does not have the certification required under this subsection or the regulations issued hereunder.

(3) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may (A) deny entry to any facility, to any port or place in the United States, or to the navigable waters, or (B) detain at the facility or at the port of place in the United States, any vessel subject to this subsection that, upon request, does not produce the certification required under this subsection or regulations issued hereunder.

(b) The responsible party with respect to each facility shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility sufficient to satisfy the maximum amount of liability to which the responsible party would be exposed in a case where he would be entitled to limit his liability in accordance with subsection (b) of section 604 of this title. In cases where the responsible party is responsible for more than one facility subject to this subsection, evidence of financial responsibility need be established only to meet the maximum liability applicable to one such facility.

(c) Financial responsibility under this section may be established by any one, or by any combination, of the following methods acceptable to the Secretary: evidence of insurance, surety bond, qualification as a self-insurer, or other evidence of financial responsibility. Any bond filed shall be issued by a bonding company authorized to do business in the United States.

(d) Any claim authorized by section 603(a) of this title may be asserted directly against any guarantor providing evidence of financial responsibility as required under this section for any responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel. In defending against such a claim, the guarantor may invoke all rights and defenses which would be available to the responsible party under this title. He may also invoke the defense that the incident was caused by the willful misconduct of the responsible party, but he may not invoke any other defense that he might be entitled to invoke in proceedings brought by the responsible party against him.

(e) Nothing in this title shall impose liability with respect to an incident on any guarantor for damages or removal costs which exceeds in the aggregate the amount of financial responsibility which that guarantor has provided for each responsible party. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit any other statutory, contractual, or common law liability of a guarantor to any responsible party for whom such guarantor provides evidence of financial responsibility including, but not limited to, the liability of such guarantor for negotiating in bad faith a settlement of any claim.

DESIGNATION AND ADVERTISEMENT

SEC. 606. (a)(1) When the Secretary receives information of an incident that involves oil pollution, he shall, where possible and appropriate, designate the source or sources of the oil pollution and shall immediately notify the responsible party and the guarantor, if known, of that designation.

(2) When a source designated is a vessel or facility, and the responsible party or guarantor fails to inform the Secretary, within five days after receiving notification of the designation, of his denial of the designation, the responsible party or guarantor, as required by regulations promulgated by the Secretary, shall advertise the designation and the procedures by which claims may be presented to such responsible party or guarantor. If advertisement is not otherwise made in accordance with this paragraph, the Secretary shall, as he finds necessary, and at the expense of the responsible party or the guarantor involved, advertise the designation and the procedures by which claims may be presented to that responsible party or guarantor.

(b) In a case where—

(1) the responsible party and the guarantor both deny a designation in accordance with paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this section.

(2) the source of the discharge was a public vessel, or

(3) the Secretary is unable to designate the source or sources of the discharge under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of this section,

the Secretary shall, in accordance with section 607 of this title, advertise or otherwise notify potential claimants of the procedures by which claims may be presented to the Trust Fund.

(c) Advertisement under subsection (a) shall commence no later than fifteen days from the date of the designation made thereunder and shall continue for a period of no less than thirty days.

CLAIMS SETTLEMENT

SEC. 607. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, all claims shall be presented to the responsible party or guarantor designated under section 606(a) of this title.

(b) Claims may be presented to the Trust Fund—

(1) where the Secretary has advertised or otherwise notified claimants in accordance with section 606(b) of this title; or

(2) where the responsible party may assert a claim under section 603(b)(1) of this title.

(c) In the case of a claim presented in accordance with subsection (a) of this section, and in which—

(1) each person to whom the claim is presented denies all liability for the claim, for any reason, or

(2) the claim is not settled by any person by payment within sixty days of the date upon which (A) the claim was presented, or (B) advertising was commenced pursuant to section 606(a)(2) of this title, whichever is later, the claimant may elect to commence an action in court against the responsible party or guarantor or to present the claim to the Trust Fund, that election to be irrevocable and exclusive.

(d) In the case of a claim presented in accordance with subsection (a) of this section, where full and adequate compensation is unavailable, either because the claim exceeds a limit of liability invoked under section 604 of this title or because the responsible party and his guarantor are financially incapable of meeting their obligations in full, a claim for the uncompensated damages may be presented to the Trust Fund.

(e) In the case of a claim which has been presented to any person under subsection (a) of this section and which is being presented to the Trust Fund under subsection (c) or (d) of this section, that person, at the request of the claimant, shall transmit the claim and supporting documents to the Trust Fund. The Secretary may, by regulation, prescribe the documents to be so transmitted and the terms under which they are to be transmitted.

(f)(1) The Secretary, in consultation with the Trust Fund, shall establish procedures and standards for the prompt appraisal and settlement of claims against the Trust Fund.

(2) The Trust Fund may use the facilities and services of private insurance and claims adjusting organizations or State agencies in processing claims against the Trust Fund and may contract for those facilities and services.

(3) To the extent necessitated by extraordinary circumstances, where the services of private organizations or State agencies are inadequate, the Trust Fund may use Federal personnel, on a reimbursable basis, to process claims against the Trust Fund.

(g) Any claimant, or any other person suffering legal wrong because of, or adversely affected or aggrieved by, a final determination of the Trust Fund with respect to a claim, may bring an action for judicial review of the determination. Such action shall be brought under section 609 and shall be the exclusive judicial remedy with respect to such final determination of the Trust Fund. Such an action shall be filed not later than thirty days after the Trust Fund issues notification of the final determination. Venue for any such action shall lie in any district wherein the claimant resides, in addition to any district described in section 609(b). The final determination of the Trust Fund shall not be held unlawful or set aside unless the reviewing court finds such determination to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.

ACTIONS TO ENFORCE LIABILITY

SEC. 608. (a)(1) In any action brought under this title against a responsible party or guarantor, both the plaintiff and defendant shall serve a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings therein upon the Trust Fund at the same time those pleadings are served upon the opposing parties.

(2) The Trust Fund may intervene as a party as a matter of right in any action in which a complaint has been served upon it under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(3) In any action to which the Trust Fund is a party, if the responsible party or his guarantor admits liability under this title, the Trust Fund shall be dismissed therefrom to the extent of the admitted liability.

(4) If the Trust Fund has been served a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings in an action referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Trust Fund shall be bound by any judgment entered therein, whether or not the Trust Fund was a party to the action.

(5) If neither the plaintiff nor the defendant serves a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings upon the Trust Fund in an action referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the limitation of liability otherwise permitted by subsection (b) of section 604 of this title is not available to the defendant, and the plaintiff shall not recover from the Trust Fund any sums not paid by the defendant.

(b) In any action brought against the Trust Fund, the plaintiff may join any responsible party or his guarantor, and the Trust Fund may implead any person, who is or may be liable to the Trust Fund.

(c) No claim may be presented, nor may any action be commenced for damages recoverable under this title, unless that claim is presented to, or that action is commenced against a responsible party or his guarantor or against the Trust Fund, as to their respective liabilities, within three years from the date of discovery of the economic loss for which a claim may be asserted under subsection (a) of section 603 of this title, or within six years of the date of the incident which resulted in that loss, whichever is earlier.

(d) Any person, including the Trust Fund, who compensates any claimant for an economic loss, compensable under section 603, shall be subrogated to all rights, claims, and causes of action which that claimant has under this title.

(e) In any claim or action by the Trust Fund against any responsible party or guarantor under subsection (d), the Trust Fund shall recover—

(1) for a claim presented to the Trust Fund (where there has been a denial of source designation) under section 607(b)(1), or (where there has been denial of liability) under section 607(c)(1)—

(A) subject only to the limitation of liability to which the defendant is entitled under section 604(b), the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant, without reduction;

(B) interest on that amount, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 604(e), from the date upon which the claim was presented by the claimant to the defendant to the date upon which the Trust Fund is paid by the defendant, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the Trust Fund shall offer to the claimant the amount finally paid by the Trust Fund to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim against the Trust Fund to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that offer, inclusive;

(C) all costs incurred by the Trust Fund by reason of the claim, both of the claimant against the Trust Fund and the Trust Fund against the defendant, including, but not limited to, processing costs, investigating costs, court costs, and attorney's fees; and

(2) for a claim presented to the Trust Fund under section 607(c)(2)—

(A) in which the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant exceeds the largest amount, if any, the defendant offered to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim of the claimant against the defendant—

(i) subject to dispute by the defendant as to any excess over the amount offered to the claimant by the defendant, the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant;

(ii) interest, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 604(e), for the period specified in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection; and

(iii) all costs incurred by the Trust Fund by reason of the claim of the Trust Fund against the defendant, including, but not limited to, processing costs, investigating costs, court costs, and attorney's fees; or

(B) in which the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant is less than or equal to the largest amount the defendant offered to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim of the claimant against the defendant—

(i) the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant, without reduction;

(ii) interest, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 604(e), from the date upon which the claim was presented by the claimant to the defendant to the date upon which the defendant offered to the claimant the largest amount referred to in this subclause, except that if the defendant tendered the offer of the largest amount referred to in this subparagraph within sixty days after the date upon which the claim of the claimant was either presented to the defendant or advertising was commenced under section 106, the defendant shall not be liable for interest for that period; and

(iii) interest from the date upon which the claim of the Trust Fund against the defendant was presented to the defendant to the date upon which the Trust Fund is paid, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the defendant shall offer to the Trust Fund the amount finally paid to the Trust Fund in satisfaction of the claim of the Trust Fund to the date upon which the Trust Fund shall accept that offer, inclusive.

(f) The Trust Fund shall pay over to the claimant that portion of any interest the Trust Fund shall recover, under subsections (e)(1) and (e)(2)(A) for the period from the date upon which the claim of the claimant was presented to the defendant to the date upon which the claimant was paid by the Trust Fund, inclusive, less the period from the date upon which the Trust Fund offered to the claimant the amount finally paid to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that offer, inclusive.

(g) The Trust Fund is entitled to recover for all interest and costs specified in subsection (e) without regard to any limitation of liability to which the defendant may otherwise be entitled.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

SEC. 609. (a) The United States district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction over all controversies arising uder titles VI, VII and VIII of this Act, without regard to the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy.

(b) Unless otherwise provided in this Act, venue shall lie in any district wherein the injury complained of occurred, or wherein the defendant resides, may be found, or has his principal office. For purposes of this section, the Trust Fund shall reside in the District of Columbia.

RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAW

SEC. 610. (a) Except as provided in this title—

(1) no action may be brought in any court of the United States, or of any State or political subdivision thereof, for an economic loss compensable under this title,

(2) no person may be required to contribute to any fund, the purpose of which is to compensate for damages for an economic loss described in section 603(a), except that, for a period of three years beginning on the effective date of this section. Any State which on the effective date of this section has in effect a statute that require such contributions may continue to require such contributions within the limits established by such statute as those limits exist on such date, and

(3) no person may be required to establish or maintain evidence of financial responsibilty relating to the satisfaction of a claim compensable under this title.

(b) Nothing in this Act shall preclude any State from imposing a tax or fee upon any person or upon oil in order to finance the purchase and prepositioning of oil pollution cleanup and removal equipment or to finance other preparations for responding to a discharge of oil which affects such States.

(c) Nothing in subsection (a) shall prohibit an action by the Trust Fund under any other provision of law to recover compensation paid under this title.

PENALTIES

SEC. 611. Any person who, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, is found to have failed to comply with the requirements of section 605 of this title or the regulations issued thereunder or with any denial or detention order shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty, not to exceed $10,000 for each violation. The amount of the civil penalty shall be assessed by the Secretary by written notice. In determining the amount of such penalty, the Secretary shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent and gravity of the prohibited acts committed and, with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require. The Secretary may comprise, modify, or remit with or without conditions, any civil penalty which is subject to imposition or which has been imposed under this section. If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become final. The Secretary may refer the matter to the Attorney General for collection.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 612. There are authorized to be appropriated for those fiscal years which begin on or after October 1, 1984, such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act.

TITLE VII—COMPREHENSIVE OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY TRUST FUND

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COMPREHENSIVE OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY TRUST FUND

SEC. 701. (a) The Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund is established as a nonprofit corporate entity. The Trust Fund shall consist of—

(1) fees paid into the Trust Fund under section 702.

(2) amounts recovered or collected on behalf of the Trust Fund under title VI of this Act, and

(3) amounts transferred to the Trust Fund under sections 802(f) and 802(g) of this Act.

(b) The Trust Fund shall be administered by a Board of Directors under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

(c)(1) The Board of Directors shall consist of nine voting directors appointed by the Secretary as follows—

(A) three shall be representatives of persons who are liable for fees imposed under this title;

(B) three shall be individuals (including, but not limited to representatives of any State or political subdivision thereof) who are potential claimants under paragraph (2), (4), or (5) of section 603(b) of this Act; and

(C) three shall be individuals from the general public, who are not eligible for appointment under subparagraph (A), and who have particular expertise, knowledge, and experience in the field of oil spill liability and compensation (including, but not limited to, environmental or labor representatives or guarantors).

(2) Not more than five voting directors shall be members of any one political party. All directors shall be citizens of the United States.

(3) The term of office of each director shall be six years, except that of the directors first appointed three shall be appointed for terms of two years, three shall be appointed for terms of four years, and three shall be appointed for terms of six years. Any director appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of that term.

(4) The Secretary or his delegate shall serve as a nonvoting member of the Board of Directors.

(5) The levels of compensation of the Board of Directors shall be fixed initially by the Secretary and may be adjusted from time to time upon recommendation by the Board of Directors and concurrence of the Secretary. Any member of the Board of Directors who is an officer or employee of the United States, and any other member of the Board of Directors who is prohibited by the terms of his employment from receiving additional compensation, shall receive no additional compensation on account of that member's service on the Board of Directors.

(6) Any director may be removed from office by the Secretary only for neglect of duty, malfeasance in office, or incompetence, or if the director no longer qualifies to be a director under paragraph (1).

(7) The Board of Directors shall meet at least once a year. A majority of the voting members of the Board of Directors shall constitute a quorum, and any action by the Board of Directors shall be effected by majority vote of the voting members of the Board of Directors.

(8) All meetings of the Board of Directors held to conduct official business of the Trust Fund shall be open to public observation and shall be preceded by reasonable public notice. The Board of Directors may close a meeting if the meeting is likely to disclose—

(A) information the premature disclosure of which would be likely to lead to speculation in investments of the Trust Fund; or

(B) information which is likely to adversely affect financial or securities markets or institutions.

(9) The determination to close any meeting of the Board of Directors for any of the purposes specified in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (7) shall be made in a meeting of the Board of Directors open to public observation preceded by reasonable notice. The Board of Directors shall prepare minutes of any meeting which is closed to the public and such minutes shall be made promptly available to the public, except for those portions thereof which, in the judgment of the Board of Directors, may be withheld under the provisions of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (7).

(d)(1) The Board of Directors shall appoint a chief executive officer of the Trust Fund who shall be responsible for the administration of the Trust Fund.

(2) The Board of Directors shall—

(A) establish the offices and appoint the officers of the Trust Fund and define their duties;

(B) fix the compensation of individual officer positions and categories of other employees of the Trust Fund taking into consideration the rates of compensation in effect under the Executive Schedule and the General Schedule prescribed by subchapters II and III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code for comparable positions or categories. If the Board of Directors determines that it is necessary to fix the compensation of any officer position or category of other positions at a rate or rates in excess of that prescribed for level I of the Executive Schedule under section 5312 of title 5, the Board of Directors may transmit to the Secretary its recommendations with respect to the rates of compensation it deems advisable for such positions and categories. Such recommendations shall become effective at the beginning of the first pay period which begins after the thirtieth day following the transmittal of such recommendations unless the Secretary has specifically disapproved such recommendation and notified the Board of Directors to such effect; and

(C) provide a system of organization to fix responsibility and promote efficiency.

(3) Except as specifically provided herein, directors, officers, and employees of the Trust Fund shall not be subject to any law of the United States relating to governmental employment.

(4) The chief executive officer shall appoint such employees as may be necessary for the transaction of the Trust Fund's business to, and may discharge such employees from, positions established in accordance with this section.

(5) No political test or qualification shall be used in selecting, appointing, promoting, or taking other personnel actions with respect to officers, agents, and employees of the Trust Fund, except as provided in subsection (c)(1) of this section.

(6) The Board of Directors may provide for reimbursement of directors, officers, and employees for travel expenses and per diem.

(e) The Trust Fund and its income and property shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, except that—

(1) any real property owned in fee by the Trust Fund shall be subject to State, territorial, county, municipal, or other local taxation to the same extent, according to its value, as other similarly situated and used real property, without discrimination in the valuation, classification, or assessment thereof; and

(2) the Trust Fund and its employees shall be subject to any nondiscriminatory payroll and employment taxes intended to finance benefits based upon employment (such as social security and unemployment benefits) to the same extent as any privately owned corporation.

(f) The Trust Fund shall have the power to sue and be sued in its own name and to exercise all other lawful powers necessarily or reasonably related to the establishment of the Trust Fund and the exercise of its functions and duties under this Act.

(g)(1) The Trust Fund shall have an independent annual audit prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles.

(2) Not later than one hundred and twenty days after the end of each fiscal year of the Trust Fund, the Trust Fund shall submit to the Congress and the Secretary an annual report containing the audit prepared under paragraph (1) and information regarding the organization, procedures, and activities of the Trust Fund during the preceding fiscal year.

(h) The principal office of the Trust Fund shall be located in the District of Columbia.

(i) Except to the extent expressly provided herein, the Trust Fund shall not be deemed to be an agency of the United States or an instrumentality of the United States.

(j) This title shall be considered the articles of incorporation for the Trust Fund.

FUND COLLECTIONS

SEC. 702. (a) A fee of 1.3 cents a barrel shall be paid into the Trust Fund by the owner of—

(1) oil received at a United States refinery;

(2) oil entered into the United States for consumption, use, or warehousing; and

(3) oil produced from a well located in the United States which is used in or exported from the United States.

(b) The Secretary, in consultation with the Trust Fund, shall by regulation establish procedures for the collection of the fee imposed by subsection (a).

(c) The fee imposed by subsection (a) shall only be in effect during those times when the amount in the Trust Fund (including the value of any securities held by the Trust Fund pursuant to section 703(b)) is less than $200,000,000.

(d) No fee shall be collected under this section with respect to any oil if the person who would be liable for the fee establishes that a prior fee has been imposed by this section with respect to that oil.

(e) The Trust Fund may bring an action in the district court of the United States for the collection of any fee required to be paid under this section.

(f) Any person who fails to collect or pay any fee as required by this section shall be liable for a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000, to be assessed by the Secretary of Transportation, in addition to the fee required to be collected or paid and the interest on such fee in an amount equal to the amount such fee would have earned if collected or paid when due and invested in accordance with subsection (b) of section 703. Upon the failure of any person so liable to pay any penalty, fee, or interest upon demand, the Attorney General may, at the request of the Secretary of Transportation, bring an action in the name of the Fund against that person for such amount.

TRUST FUND DISBURSEMENT AND INVESTMENT

SEC. 703. (a) The Trust Fund shall be available subject to appropriations, for the purposes of—

(1) immediate payment of removal costs described in section 602(24)(A) and of reasonable costs incurred by the trustee under section 603(a)(3) in assessing damaged natural resources and preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged natural resources;

(2) the payment of claims under title VI of this Act for damage which is not otherwise compensated; and

(3) the costs of administration of this Act.

(b) All sums not needed for purposes of subsection (a) shall be invested prudently in income producing securities approved by the Secretary in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary. Income from these securities shall be added to the principal of the Trust Fund, except that whenever the amount in the Trust Fund (including the value of such securities) exceeds $300,000,000, the amount of any income from such securities shall be rebated, subject to appropriations, on a pro rata basis to the owners of the oil who contributed fees to the Trust Fund. If any owner no longer exists or income cannot otherwise be rebated after due diligence to do so, the income shall be retained by the Trust Fund.

LIMITATION ON PAYMENT OF CLAIMS BY THE TRUST FUND

SEC. 704. (a) No amount in the Trust Fund may be used to pay any claim, other than a claim for removal costs, to the extent that the payment of that claim would reduce the amount in the Trust Fund to an amount less than $30,000,000.

(b) If at any time the Trust Fund is unable by reason of subsection (a) to pay all of the claims, other than for removal costs, payable at that time, those claims shall, to the extent permitted under subsection (a), be paid in full in the order in which they were finally determined. Subject to approval of the Secretary, the Trust Fund may borrow amounts from any commercial credit source, at the best available terms, for purposes of paying such claims in such order.

(c) The liability of the Trust Fund under this Act with respect to one incident shall not exceed $100,000,000. If the Trust Fund is unable by reason of the preceding sentence to pay all claims with respect to the incident, the claims shall be reduced proportionately.

ANNUAL AUDIT REVIEW

SEC. 705. The Comptroller General shall review the audit required by section 701(g)(1) and shall submit a report of its review to Congress.

COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS OF THIS ACT

SEC. 706. (a) If any provision of this Act provides that the balance in any fund (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as the "transferor fund") is to be transferred to the Trust Fund, any claim which arises before October 1, 1984 (to the extent such claim would have been payable out of the transferor fund), shall be payable, subject to appropriations, out of the Trust Fund notwithstanding any of the limitations imposed by this title.

(b)(1) If the Secretary or his delegate determines that there is a TAP fund deficit, the fee imposed by section 702(a) on oil first transported through the Trans-Alaska Pipeline after the date of such determination shall be increased by 2 cents per barrel until the total amount of the increased fees equals such deficit.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the term "TAP fund deficit" means the excess (if any) of—

(A) the amount certified by the Secretary of the Interior as the total amount of the claims outstanding against the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund under section 802(b)(2) of this Act, over

(B) the total amount of the assets of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund as of the effective date of this section.

DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES

SEC. 707. (a) For purposes of this title, the term "United States" includes the Outer Continental Shelf and any foreign trade zone of the United States.

(b) In the case of any United States refinery which produces natural gasoline from natural gas, the gasoline so produced shall be treated as received at the refinery at the time so produced.

(c) In the case of a fraction of a barrel, the fee imposed by section 702(a) of this title shall be the same fraction of the amount of the fee imposed on a whole barrel.

TITLE VIII—REGULATIONS, EFFECTIVE DATES, AND SAVINGS PROVISIONS

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 801. (a) This section, section 601, section 602, section 612, title VII (other than section 702 (a), (c), (d), (e), and (f), section 703, and section 704), section 803, and each provision of title VI that authorizes the promulgation of regulations shall be effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) All other provisions of titles VI through VIII and the regulations issued thereunder, shall be effective on October 1, 1985, except that the penalty prescribed by section 611 for failure to comply with the requirements of section 605 or the regulations issued thereunder shall not be effective until the ninetieth day after issuance of those regulations or the two hundred and seventieth day after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is earlier.

(c) Any regulation respecting financial responsibility, issued pursuant to any provision of law repealed by section 302 of this title, and in effect on the day immediately preceding the effective date of section 302 of this title shall remain in force until superseded by regulations issued under title VI of this Act.

CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 802. (a) The first sentence of subsection (b) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act (43 U.S.C. 1653(b); 87 Stat. 586) is amended by inserting "in the State of Alaska" after "any area" and by inserting "related to the trans-Alaska oil pipeline" after "any activities". Such subsection is further amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "This subsection shall not apply to removal costs resulting from oil pollution as that term is defined in section 602 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(b)(1) Subsection (c) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act is repealed. All assets of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund, as of the effective date of this section, except for assets equal to the total amount of claims certified by the Secretary under paragraph (2) of this subsection, shall be rebated, subject to appropriations, directly to the operator of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline for payment on a pro rata basis to the owners of the oil at the time it was loaded on the vessel. The Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Trans-Alaska Pipiline Liability Fund under terms of subsection (c) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, and shall assume all liability incurred by the officers or trustees in the execution of their duties involving the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund, other than the liability of those officers or trustees for gross negligence or willful misconduct.

The Secretary of the Interior shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the total amount of the claims outstanding against the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund not later than one hundred and eighty days after the effective date of this section. In the event that the total amount of the actual claims settled is less than the total amount of the outstanding claims certified, the difference between these amounts shall be rebated directly to the operator of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline for payment, on a pro rata basis, to the owners of the oil at the time it was loaded on the vessel.

(C) Section 17 of the Intervention on the High Seas Act (33 U.S.C. 1486; 88 Stat. 10) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. The fund established under title VII of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act shall be available to the Secreary for actions and activities relating to oil pollution (as defined in section 602 of that Act) taken under section 5 of this Act. The fund established under section 311(k) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act shall be available for actions and activities relating to other pollution taken under section 5 of this Act.".

(d) Section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended by striking ut the period at the end of paragraph (17) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following new paragaph:

"(18) 'person in charge' means the individual immediately responsible for the operation of a vessel or facility."

(2) Paragraph (5) of subsection (b) is amended in the last sentence by inserting after "person" the following: "or his employer".

(3) Subparagraph (A) of paragraph (6) of subsection (b) is amended—

(A) in the first and second sentences, by striking out "or person in charge" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "person in charge, or employer of such person in charge"; and

(B) in the third sentence, by striking out "the owner or operator" and inserting in lieu thereof "whoever being".

(4) Subparagraph (B) of paragraph (6) of subsection (b) is amended in the first and second sentences by striking out "or person in charge" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "person in charge, or employer of such person in charge".

(5) Subsection (c)(2)(H) is amended by striking out "from the fund established under subsection (k) of this section for the reasonable costs incurred in such removal" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "for the reasonable costs incurred in such removal (i) from the fund established under section 701 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act in the case of any discharge from a vessel of petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom, or from a facility (as defined by title VI of such Act or (ii) from the fund established under subsection (k) of this section in any other case".

(6)(A) Subsection (d) is amended by inserting immediately before the last sentence the following: "Any expense incurred under this subsection or under the Intervention on the High Seas Act (or the convention defined in section 2(3) thereof) as the result of the discharge or imminent discharge from a vessel of petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom, shall be reimbursed from the fund established under section 701 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(B) Subsection (d) is further amended by striking out "Any" in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "Any other".

(7) Subsection (f)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the first place it appears and by striking out "carrying oil" and inserting in lieu thereof "carrying such oil".

(8) Subsection (f)(3) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined by section 602 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the first place it appears.

(9)(A) The first sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the second place it appears, by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 602 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the first place it appears.

(B) The second sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 602 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the second place it appears.

(C) The third sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "such" before "oil" the first place it appears and by striking out "carrying oil" and inserting in lieu thereof "carrying such oil".

(10)(A) Subsection (i)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 602 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the second place it appears.

(B) Subsection (i)(2) is repealed and paragraph (3) of subsection (i) and all references thereto is redesignated as paragraph (2).

(11) Subsection (p)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the first place it appears.

(e) The Deepwater Port Act of 1974 (33 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.; 88 Stat. 2126) is amended as follows:

(1) Section 4(c)(1) is amended by striking out "section 18(l) of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 605 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act".

(2) Subsections (b), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (l), and (n) of section 18 are repealed.

(3) Paragraph (3) of subsection (c) of section 18 is amended by striking out "Deepwater Port Liability Fund established pursuant to subsection (f) of this section." and inserting in lieu thereof "fund established under title VII of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(4) Subsection (k) of section 18 is amended to read as follows:

"(k) This section shall not be interpreted to preclude any State from imposing additional requirements, not inconsistent with the provisions of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act, for any discharge of oil from a deepwater port or a vessel within any safety zone.".

(5) Subsections (c), (k), and (m) of section 18 are redesignated as subsections (b), (c), and (d), respectively.

(f) Any amounts remaining in the Deepwater Port Liability Fund established by section 18(f) of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 shall, subject to appropriations, be deposited in the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund established by title VII of this Act. The Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Deepwater Port Liability Fund under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974.

((g) Title III of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978 (Public Law 95-372) is repealed. Any amounts remaining in the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund established under section 302 of that title shall, subject to appropriations, be deposited in the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund established by title VII of this Act. The Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund under title III of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 803. If any provision of this Act or the applicability thereof is held invalid, the remainder of this Act shall not be affected thereby.

(Amendment No. 12 to committee print.)

—Add a new title V as follows and redesignate the existing title V as title VI:

TITLE V—OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY AND COMPENSATION

Subtitle A—Short Title and Definitions

SEC. 501. (a) Subtitles A–D may be cited as the "Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act."

(b) For the purposes of this Act, the term—

(1) "barrel" means forty-two United States gallons at sixty degrees Fahrenheit;

(2) "claim" means a demand in writing for a sum certain;

(3) "cleanup costs" means costs of reasonable measures taken, after an incident has occurred, to prevent, minimize, or mitigate oil pollution from that incident;

(4) "discharge" means any emission, intentional or unintentional, and includes spilling, leaking, pumping, pouring, emptying, or dumping;

(5) "facility" means a structure, or group of structures, which is either—

(A) located, in whole or in part, on the outer Continental Shelf and used for the purposes of exploring for, drilling for, producing, storing, handling, transferring, processing, or transporting oil produced from the outer Continental Shelf, or

(B) licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974;

(6) "foreign claimant" means any person residing in a foreign country, the government of a foreign country, or any agency or political subdivision thereof, who asserts a claim;

(7) "guarantor" means the person, other than the responsible party, who provides evidence of financial responsibility for a responsible party;

(8) "incident" means any occurrence or series of occurrences having the same origin, involving one or more vessels, facilities, or any combination thereof, which causes, or poses a substantial threat, of oil pollution;

(9) "inland oil barge" means a non-self-propelled vessel, carrying oil in bulk as cargo or in residue from cargo and certificated to operate only on the internal waters of the United States while operating in such waters;

(10) "internal waters of the United States" means those waters of the United States lying inside the baseline from which the territorial sea is measured and those waters outside that baseline which are a part of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway;

(11) "lessee" means a person holding a leasehold interest in an oil and gas lease on submerged lands of the outer Continental Shelf granted or maintained under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(12) "licensee" means a person holding a license issued under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974;

(13) "mobile offshore drilling unit" means every watercraft or other contrivance (other than a public vessel of the United States) capable of use as a means of transportation on water and as a means of drilling for oil on the outer Continental Shelf;

(14) "natural resources" means living nonliving resources belonging to, managed by, held in trust by, appertaining to, or otherwise controlled by the United States (including the resources of the fishery conservation zone established by the Fishery Conservation and Management Act of 1976), any State or local government, or any foreign government;

(15) "navigable waters" means the waters of the United States, including the territorial sea;

(16) "oil" means petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom;

(17) "oil pollution" means—

(A) the presence of oil which has been discharged from a vessel or facility in quantities which the President has determined may be harmful pursuant to paragraph (4) of subsection (b) of section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act—

(i) in or on the navigable waters or on land within the United States immediately adjacent thereto; or

(ii) in or on the waters of the contiguous zone established by the United States under article 24 of the Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone; or

(B) the presence of oil (other than natural seepage) in or on the waters of the high seas outside the territorial limits of the United States—

(i) when discharged in connection with activities conducted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(ii) when discharged from a deepwater port licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 or from a vessel transiting to or from a deepwater port and located in a safety zone of a deepwater port licensed under such Act;

(iii) causing injury to or loss of natural resources belonging to, appertaining to, or under the exclusive management authority of, the United States; or

(iv) when discharged, prior to being brought ashore in a port in the United States, from a ship that received oil at the terminal of the pipeline constructed under the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act (43 U.S.C. 1651 et seq.) for transportation to a port in the United States; or

(C) the presence of oil (other than natural seepage) in or on the territorial sea, internal waters, or adjacent shoreline, of a foreign country, in a case where damages are recoverable by a foreign claimant under section 503(b)(6) of this title;

(18) "operator" means—

(A) in the case of a vessel, a charterer by demise or any other person, except the owner, who is responsible for the operation, manning, victualing, and supplying of the vessel; or

(B) in the case of a pipeline, any person, except the owner, who is responsible for the operation of such pipeline by agreement with the owner;

(19) "outer Continental Shelf" has the meaning set forth in subsection (a) of section 2 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(20) "owner" means, in the case of a vessel or a pipeline, any person holding title to, or in the absence of title, any other indicia of ownership of, the vessel or pipeline, whether by lease, permit, contract, license, or other form of agreement, except that such term does not include a person who, without participating in the management or operation of a vessel or a pipeline, holds indicia of ownership primarily to protect his security interest in the vessel or pipeline;

(21) "permittee" means a person holding an authorization, license, or permit for geological exploration issued under section 11 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(22) "person" means an individual, firm, corporation, association, partnership, consortium, joint venture, or any other commercial, legal, or governmental entity;

(23) "public vessel" means a vessel which—

(A) is owned or chartered by demise, and operated by (i) the United States, (ii) a State or political subdivision thereof, or (iii) a foreign government, and

(B) is not engaged in commercial service;

(24) "removal costs" means—

(A) costs incurred under subsection (c), (d), or (l) of section 311 of Federal Water Pollution Control Act, section 5 of the Intervention on the High Seas Act, or subsection (b) of section 18 of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974, and

(B) cleanup costs, other than the costs described in subparagraph (A);

(25) "responsible party" means—

(A) with respect to a vessel or a pipeline, the owner or operator of such vessel or pipeline;

(B) with respect to a facility (other than a deepwater port or pipeline), the lessee or permittee of the area in which such facility is located, or the holder of a right of use and easement granted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act for the area in which such facility is located where such holder is a different person than the lessee or permittee; and

(C) with respect to a deepwater port, the licensee;

(26) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation;

(27) "ship" means a vessel (other than an inland oil barge) carrying oil in bulk as cargo or in residue from cargo;

(28) "Trust Fund" means the fund established by Subtitle B of this Act;

(29) "United States" and "State" include the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States;

(30) "United States claimant" means any person residing in the United States, the Government of the United States or any agency thereof, or the government of a State or a political subdivision thereof, who asserts a claim; and

(31) "vessel" means every description of watercraft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water.

COORDINATION WITH INTERNATIONAL CONVENTIONS

SEC. 502. On and after the first date on which both the International Convention of Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage and the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage are in force with respect to the United States, this title shall not apply with respect to damage arising out of or directly resulting from oil pollution or a substantial threat of oil pollution to the extent this title is inconsistent with such conventions and subtitle D of this Act.

DAMAGES AND CLAIMANTS

SEC. 503. (a) Claims for damages for economic loss, incurred on or after the effective date of this section and arising out of or directly resulting from oil pollution or the substantial threat of oil pollution, may be asserted for—

(1) removal costs;

(2) injury to, or destruction of, real or personal property;

(3) injury to, or destruction of, natural resources, including reasonable cost incurred by the trustee of the damaged resources in assessing both short-term and long-term injury to, or destruction of, the damaged resources, preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged resources, and restoring or acquiring the equivalent of the damaged resources;

(4) loss of subsistence use of natural resources;

(5) loss of profits or impairment of earning capacity due to injury or destruction of real or personal property or natural resources to the extent that such damages were sustained during the two-year period beginning on the date the claimant first suffered such loss; and

(6) loss of tax revenue for a period of one year due to injury to real or personal property.

(b)(1) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) by any claimant, except that the responsible party with respect to a vessel or facility involved in an incident may assert such a claim only if he can show that he is entitled to a defense to liability under section 504(c) of this title or, if not entitled to such a defense to liability, that he is entitled to a limitation of liability under section 504(b) of this title, in which case the claim may be asserted only to the extent that the sum of the removal costs incurred by the responsible party plus the amounts paid by the responsible party or by the guarantor on behalf of the responsible party for claims asserted under subsection (a) of this section exceeds the amount to which the total of the liability under section 504(a) and removal costs incurred by, or on behalf of, the responsible party is limited under section 504(b).

(2) A claim may be asserted under paragraphs (2) and (4) of subsection (a) by any United States claimant, if the property involved is owned or leased, or the natural resource involved is utilized, by the claimant.

(3) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (3) of subsection (a) by the President, as trustee for natural resources over which the United States Government has sovereign rights or exercise exclusive management authority, or by the Governor of any State for natural resources within the boundary of the State belonging to, managed by, controlled by, or appertaining to the State. Compensation paid under this paragraph may be used only for assessing both short-term and long-term injury to, or destruction of, the damaged resources, preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged resources, and restoring or acquiring the equivalent of the damaged resources.

(4) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (5) of subsection (a) by any United States claimant if the claimant derives at least 25 per centum of his earnings from activities which utilize the property or natural resource or, if such activities are seasonal in nature, 25 per centum of the claimant's earnings during the season in which such activities took place.

(5) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (6) of subsection (a) by any State or political subdivision thereof.

(6) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, a claim may be asserted under paragraphs (2), (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (a) by a foreign claimant to the same extent that a United States claimant may assert a claim if—

(A) the oil pollution occured in the waters, including the territorial sea, or adjacent shoreline of a foreign country of which the claimant is a resident;

(B) the claimant is not otherwise compensated for his loss;

(C) the oil was discharged from a vessel located within the navigable waters, was discharged in connection with activities conducted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, or was discharged from a deepwater port licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 or a vessel transitting to or from a deepwater port and located in a safety zone of a deepwater port under such Act; and

(D) recovery is authorized by a treaty or an executive agreement between the United States and the foreign country of which the claimant is a resident, or the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Attorney General and other appropriate officials, certifies that such country provides a comparable remedy for United States claimants.

In the case of any oil pollution involving oil that has been transported through the pipeline constructed under the provisions of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, has been loaded on a vessel for transportation to a port in the United States, and is discharged from such vessel before being unloaded in that port, a claim may be asserted by a resident of Canada without regard to subparagraphs (A), (C), and (D) of this paragraph, to the same extent that a United States claimant may assert a claim.

(7) A claim may be asserted under any paragraph of subsection (a), by the Attorney General, on his own motion or at the request of the Secretary, on behalf of any group of United States claimants who may assert a claim under this subsection.

(c) If the Attorney General fails to act under paragraph (7) of subsection (b) within sixty days after the date on which the Secretary designates a source under section 506, any member of a group may assert a claim for damages on behalf of that group. Failure of the Attorney General to act shall have no bearing on any claim for damages asserted under this section.

LIABILITY

SEC. 504. (a)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection and subsections (b) and (c) of this section, the responsible party with respect to a facility or a vessel (other than a public vessel) that is the source of oil pollution, or poses a substantial threat of oil pollution in circumstances that justify the incurrence of the type of costs described in section 501(b)(24)(A) of this title, shall be jointly, severally, and strictly liable for all damages for which a claim may be asserted under section 503.

(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, in any case in which a mobile offshore drilling unit is being used as a facility and is the source of oil pollution originating on or above the surface of the water or poses the substantial threat of such oil pollution, such unit shall be deemed to be a vessel which is a ship for purposes of this title.

(B) To the extent that damages for which claims may be asserted under section 503 from any incident described in subparagraph (A) exceed the amount for which the responsible party is liable under subparagraph (A) (as such amount may be limited under subsection (b)(2) of this section), the mobile offshore drilling unit shall be deemed to be a facility covered by subsection (b)(4) of this section, except that for purposes of applying subsection (b)(4) the amount specified in such subsection shall be reduced by the amount for which the responsible party with respect to a ship is liable under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

(C) In the case of any incident described in subparagraph (A) which is caused primarily by willful misconduct or gross negligence within the privity or knowledge of both the owner or operator of the mobile offshore drilling unit and the lessee or permittee of the area, or holder of a right of use or easement for the area, in which such unit is located; or which is caused primarily by a violation within the privity or knowledge of both such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder of applicable safety, construction, or operating standards or regulations of the United States; or with respect to which both such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder fail or refuse to report the incident where required by law or to provide all reasonable cooperation and assistance requested by the responsible Federal official in furtherance of cleanup activities, such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder shall be jointly, severally, and strictly liable (without limitation under subsection (b)) for all loss for which a claim may be asserted under section 503 of this title.

(b) Except when the incident is caused primarily by willful misconduct or gross negligence within the privity or knowledge of a responsible party, or is caused primarily by a violation within the privity or knowledge of a responsible party of applicable safety, construction, or operating standards or regulations of the United States; and except when a responsible party fails or refuses to report the incident where required by law or to provide all reasonable cooperation and assistance requested by the responsible Federal official in furtherance of cleanup activities, the total of the liability under subsection (a) of this section and any removal costs incurred by, or on behalf of, such responsible party shall be limited to—

(1) in the case of a vessel other than a ship or an inland oil barge, $150 per gross ton;

(2) in the case of a ship, $1,000,000 or $400 per gross ton, whichever is greater (but not to exceed $40,000,000);

(3) in the case of an inland oil barge, $150,000 or $150 per gross ton; whichever is greater; or

(4) in the case of a facility, $50,000,000.

The Secretary shall, from time to time, report to Congress on the desirability of adjusting the limitations of liability specified in this subsection.

(c)(1) Except when the responsible party has failed or refused to report an incident where required by law, there shall be no liability under subsection (a) of this section if such responsible party proves that the incident—

(A) resulted from an act of war, hostilities, civil war, insurrection, or a natural phenomenon of an exceptional, inevitable, and irresistible character, or

(B) was wholly caused by an act or omission of a person other than—

(i) a responsible party;

(ii) an employee or agent of a responsible party; or

(iii) one whose act or omission occurs in connection with a contractual relationship with a responsible party.

(2) There shall be no liability under subsection (a) of this section—

(A) as to particular claimant, where the incident or economic loss is caused, in whole or in part, by the gross negligence or willful misconduct of that claimant; or

(B) as to a particular claimant, to the extent that the incident or economic loss is caused by the negligence of that claimant.

(d)(1) Except as provided in subtitle B the Trust Fund shall be liable for damages for which claims may be asserted under section 503 of this title and which are presented under this title, to the extent that the loss is not otherwise compensated.

(2) Except for the removal costs specified in section 501(b)(24)(A) of this title, there shall be no liability under paragraph (1) of this subsection—

(A) where the incident is caused wholly by an act of war, hostilities, civil war, or insurrection;

(B) as to a particular claimant, where the incident or the economic loss is caused, in whole or in part, by the gross negligence or willful misconduct of that claimant; or

(C) as to a particular claimant, to the extent that the incident or the economic loss is caused by the negligence of that claimant.

(e)(1) In addition to the damages for which claims may be asserted under section 503 of this title, and without regard to any limitation of liability provided in subsection (b) of this section, the responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel, or his guarantor (subject to the guarantor's limitation set forth in subsection (d) of section 505 of this title), shall be liable to the claimant for interest on the amount paid in satisfaction of the claim for the period from the date upon which the claim was presented to the responsible party or guarantor to the date upon which the claimant is paid, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the responsible party or guarantor shall offer to the claimant an amount equal to or greater than that finally paid in satisfaction of the claim to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that amount, inclusive. However, if the responsible party or guarantor shall offer to the claimant, within sixty days of the date upon which the claim was presented, or of the date upon which advertising was commenced pursuant to section 506 of this title, whichever is later, an amount equal to or greater than that finally paid in satisfaction of the claim, the responsible party or guarantor shall be liable for the interest provided in this paragraph only from the date the offer was accepted by the claimant to the date upon which payment is made to the claimant, inclusive.

(2) The interest provided in paragraph (1) shall be calculated at the average of the highest rate for commercial and finance company paper of maturities of one hundred and eighty days or less obtaining on each of the days included within the period for which interest must be paid to the claimant, as published in the Federal Reserve bulletin.

(f)(1) A responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel may not transfer the liability imposed under this section to any other person.

(2) Nothing in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall preclude an agreement whereby a person who, by an agreement with a responsible party with respect to a facility utilized in activities under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, is engaged in such activities, agrees to indemnify the responsible party for the liability imposed under subsection (a) of this section. Nothing in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall preclude an agreement whereby a person who owns or operates a towing vessel, by an agreement with a responsible party with respect to a non-self-propelled vessel, agrees to indemnify the responsible party for the liability imposed under subsection (a) of this section.

(g) Nothing in this title shall bar a cause of action that a responsible party subject to liability under this section or a guarantor has or would have by reason of subrogation or otherwise against any person.

(h) To the extent that it is in conflict with, or otherwise inconsistent with, any other law relating to liability or the limitation thereof, this section supersedes such other law.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

SEC. 505. (a)(1) The responsible party with respect to each vessel (except a public vessel or a non-self-propelled vessel that does not carry oil as cargo or fuel) over three hundred gross tons that uses a facility or the navigable waters shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility sufficient to satisfy the maximum liability under section 504 of this title to which the responsible party would be exposed in a case where he would be entitled to limit his liability in accordance with subsection (b) of section 504 of this title. In cases where a responsible party owns or operates more than one vessel subject to this subsection, evidence of financial responsibility need be established only to meet the maximum liability applicable to the largest of such vessels.

(2) The Secretary of the Treasury shall withhold or revoke the clearance required by section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of any vessel subject to this subsection that does not have the certification required under this subsection or the regulations issued hereunder.

(3) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may (A) deny entry to any facility, to any port or place in the United States, or to the navigable waters, or (B) detain at the facility or at the port or place in the United States, any vessel subject to this subsection that, upon request, does not produce the certification required under this subsection or regulations issued hereunder.

(b) The responsible party with respect to each facility shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility sufficient to satisfy the maximum amount of liability to which the responsible party would be exposed in a case where he would be entitled to limit his liability in accordance with subsection (b) of section 504 of this title. In cases where the responsible party is responsible for more than one facility subject to this subsection, evidence of financial responsibility need be established only to meet the maximum liability applicable to one such facility.

(c) Financial responsibility under this section may be established by any one, or by any combination, of the following methods acceptable to the Secretary: evidence of insurance, surety bond, qualification as a self-insurer, or other evidence of financial responsibility. Any bond filed shall be issued by a bonding company authorized to do business in the United States.

(d) Any claim authorized by section 503(a) of this title may be asserted directly against any guarantor providing evidence of financial responsibility as required under this section for any responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel. In defending against such a claim, the guarantor may invoke all rights and defenses which would be available to the responsible party under this title. He may also invoke the defense that the incident was caused by the willful misconduct of the responsible party, but he may not invoke any other defense that he might be entitled to invoke in proceedings brought by the responsible party against him.

(e) Nothing in this title shall impose liability with respect to an incident on any guarantor for damages or removal costs which exceeds in the aggregate the amount of financial responsibility which that guarantor has provided for each responsible party. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit any other statutory, contractual, or common law liability of a guarantor to any responsible party for whom such guarantor provides evidence of financial responsibility including, but not limited to, the liability of such guarantor for negotiating in bad faith a settlement of any claim.

DESIGNATION AND ADVERTISEMENT

SEC. 506. (a)(1) When the Secretary receives information of an incident that involves oil pollution, he shall, where possible and appropriate, designate the source or sources of the oil pollution and shall immediately notify the responsible party and the guarantor, if known, of that designation.

(2) When a source designated is a vessel or facility, and the responsible party or guarantor fails to inform the Secretary, within five days after receiving notification of the designation, of his denial of the designation, the responsible party or guarantor, as required by regulations promulgated by the Secretary, shall advertise the designation and the procedures by which claims may be presented to such responsible party or guarantor. If advertisement is not otherwise made in accordance with this paragraph, the Secretary shall, as he finds necessary, and at the expense of the responsible party or the guarantor involved, advertise the designation and the procedures by which claims may be presented to that responsible party or guarantor.

(b) In a case where—

(1) the responsible party and the guarantor both deny a designation in accordance with paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this section,

(2) the source of the discharge was a public vessel, or

(3) the Secretary is unable to designate the source or sources of the discharge under paragaph (1) of subsection (a) of this section,

the Secretary shall, in accordance with section 507 of this title, advertise or otherwise notify potential claimants of the procedures by which claims may be presented to the Trust Fund.

(c) Advertisement under subsection (a) shall commence no later than fifteen days from the date of the designation made thereunder and shall continue for a period of no less than thirty days.

CLAIMS SETTLEMENT

SEC. 507. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, all claims shall be presented to the responsible party or guarantor designated under section 506(a) of this title.

(b) Claims may be presented to the Trust Fund—

(1) where the Secretary has advertised or otherwise notified claimants in accordance with section 506(b) of this title; or

(2) where the responsible party may assert a claim under section 503(b)(1) of this title.

(c) In the case of a claim presented in accordance with subsection (a) of this section, and in which—

(1) each person to whom the claim is presented denies all liability for the claim, for any reason, or

(2) the claim is not settled by any person by payment within sixty days of the date upon which (A) the claim was presented, or (B) advertising was commenced pursuant to section 506(a)(2) of this title, whichever is later, the claimant may elect to commence an action in court against the responsible party or guarantor or to present the claim to the Trust Fund, that election to be irrevocable and exclusive.

(d) In the case of a claim presented in accordance with subsection (a) of this section, where full and adequate compensation is unavailable, either because the claim exceeds a limit of liability invoked under section 504 of this title or because the responsible party and his guarantor are financially incapable of meeting their obligations in full, a claim for the uncompensated damages may be presented to the Trust Fund.

(e) In the case of a claim which has been presented to any person under subsection (a) of this section and which is being presented to the Trust Fund under subsection (c) or (d) of this section, that person, at the request of the claimant, shall transmit the claim and supporting documents to the Trust Fund. The Secretary may, by regulation, prescribe the documents to be so transmitted and the terms under which they are to be transmitted.

(f)(1) The Secretary, in consultation with the Trust Fund, shall establish procedures and standards for the prompt appraisal and settlement of claims against the Trust Fund.

(2) The Trust Fund may use the facilities and services of private insurance and claims adjusting organizations or State agencies in processing claims against the Trust Fund and may contract for those facilities and services.

(3) To the extent necessitated by extraordinary circumstances, where the services of private organizations or State agencies are inadequate, the Trust Fund may use Federal personnel, on a reimbursable basis, to process claims against the Trust Fund.

(g) Any claimant, or any other person suffering legal wrong because of, or adversely affected or aggrieved by, a final determination of the Trust Fund with respect to a claim, may bring an action for judicial review of the determination. Such action shall be brought under section 509 and shall be the exclusive judicial remedy with respect to such final determination of the Trust Fund. Such an action shall be filed not later than thirty days after the Trust Fund issues notification of the final determination. Venue for any such action shall lie in any district wherein the claimant resides, in addition to any district described in section 509(b). The final determination of the Trust Fund shall not be held unlawful or set aside unless the reviewing court finds such determination to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.

ACTIONS TO ENFORCE LIABILITY

SEC. 508. (a)(1) In any action brought under this title against a responsible party or guarantor, both the plaintill and defendant shall serve a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings therein upon the Trust Fund at the same time those pleadings are served upon the opposing parties.

(2) The Trust Fund may intervene as a party as a matter of right in any action in which a complaint has been served upon it under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(3) In any action to which the Trust Fund is a party, if the responsible party or his guarantor admits liability under this title, the Trust Fund shall be dismissed therefrom to the extent of the admitted liability.

(4) If the Trust Fund has been served a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings in an action referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Trust Fund shall be bound by any judgment entered therein, whether or not the Trust Fund was a party to the action.

(5) If neither the plaintiff nor the defendant serves a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings upon the Trust Fund in an action referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the limitation of liability otherwise permitted by subsection (b) of section 504 of this title is not available to the defendant, and the plaintiff shall not recover from the Trust Fund any sums not paid by the defendant.

(b) In any action brought against the Trust Fund, the plaintiff may join any responsible party or his guarantor, and the Trust Fund may implead any person, who is or may be liable to the Trust Fund.

(c) No claim may be presented, nor may any action be commenced for damages recoverable under this title, unless that claim is presented to, or that action is commenced against a responsible party or his guarantor or against the Trust Fund, as to their respective liabilities, within three years from the date of discovery of the economic loss for which a claim may be asserted under subsection (a) of section 503 of this title, or within six years of the date of the incident which resulted in that loss, whichever is earlier.

(d) Any person, including the Trust Fund, who compensates any claimant for an economic loss, compensable under section 503, shall be subrogated to all rights, claims, and causes of action which that claimant has under this title.

(e) In any claim or action by the Trust Fund against any responsible party or guarantor under subsection (d), the Trust Fund shall recover—

(1) for a claim presented to the Trust Fund (where there has been a denial of source designation) under section 507(b)(1), or (where there has been denial of liability) under section 507(c)(1)—

(A) subject only to the limitation of liability to which the defendant is entitled under section 504(b), the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant, without reduction;

(B) interest on that amount, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 504(e), from the date upon which the claim was presented by the claimant to the defendant to the date upon which the Trust Fund is paid by the defendant, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the Trust Fund shall offer to the claimant the amount finally paid by the Trust Fund to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim against the Trust Fund to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that offer, inclusive;

(C) all costs incurred by the Trust Fund by reason of the claim, both of the claimant against the Trust Fund and the Trust Fund against the defendant, including, but not limited to, processing costs, investigating costs, court costs, and attorney's fees; and

(2) for a claim presented to the Trust Fund under section 507(c)(2)—

(A) in which the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant exceeds the largest amount, if any, the defendant offered to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim of the claimant against the defendant—

(i) subject to dispute by the defendant as to any excess over the amount offered to the claimant by the defendant, the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant;

(ii) interest, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 504(e), for the period specified in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection; and

(iii) all costs incurred by the Trust Fund by reason of the claim of the Trust Fund against the defendant, including, but not limited to, processing costs, investigating costs, court costs, and attorney's fees; or

(B) in which the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant is less than or equal to the largest amount the defendant offered to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim of the claimant against the defendant—

(i) the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant, without reduction;

(ii) interest, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 504(e), from the date upon which the claim was presented by the claimant to the defendant to the date upon which the defendant offered to the claimant the largest amount referred to in this subclause, except that if the defendant tendered the offer of the largest amount referred to in this subparagraph within sixty days after the date upon which the claim of the claimant was either presented to the defendant or advertising was commenced under section 506, the defendant shall not be liable for interest for that period; and

(iii) interest from the date upon which the claim of the Trust Fund against the defendant was presented to the defendant to the date upon which the Trust Fund is paid, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the defendant shall offer to the Trust Fund the amount finally paid to the Trust Fund in satisfaction of the claim of the Trust Fund to the date upon which the Trust Fund shall accept that offer, inclusive.

(f) The Trust Fund shall pay over to the claimant that portion of any interest the Trust Fund shall recover, under subsections (e)(1) and (e)(2)(A) for the period from the date upon which the claim of the claimant was presented to the defendant to the date upon which the claimant was paid by the Trust Fund, inclusive, less the period from the date upon which the Trust Fund offered to the claimant the amount finally paid to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that offer, inclusive.

(g) The Trust Fund is entitled to recover for all interest and costs specified in subsection (e) without regard to any limitation of liability to which the defendant may otherwise be entitled.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

SEC. 509. (a) The United States district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction over all controversies arising under subtitles A, B, and C of this Act, without regard to the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy.

(b) Unless otherwise provided in this Act, venue shall lie in any district wherein the injury complained of occurred, or wherein the defendant resides, may be found, or has his principal office. For purposes of this section, the Trust Fund shall reside in the District of Columbia.

RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAW

SEC. 510. (a) Except as provided in this title—

(1) no action may be brought in any court of the United States, or of any State or political subdivision thereof, for an economic loss compensable under this title,

(2) no person may be required to contribute to any fund, the purpose of which is to compensate for damages for an economic loss described in section 503(a), except that, for a period of three years beginning on the effective date of this section, any State which on the effective date of this section has in effect a statute that requires such contributions may continue to require such contributions within the limits established by such statue as those limits exist on such date, and

(3) no person may be required to establish or maintain evidence of financial responsibility relating to the satisfaction of a claim compensable under this title.

(b) Nothing in this Act shall preclude any State from imposing a tax or fee upon any person or upon oil in order to finance the purchase and prepositioning of oil pollution cleanup and removal equipment or to finance other preparations for responding to a discharge of oil which affects such State.

(c) Nothing in subsection (a) shall prohibit an action by the Trust Fund under any other provision of law to recover compensation paid under this title.

PENALTIES

SEC. 511. Any person who, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, is found to have failed to comply with the requirements of section 505 of this title or the regulations issued thereunder or with any denial or detention order shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty, not to exceed $10,000 for each violation. The amount of the civil penalty shall be assessed by the Secretary by written notice. In determining the amount of such penalty, the Secretary shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the prohibited acts committed and, with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require. The Secretary may compromise, modify, or remit with or without conditions, any civil penalty which is subject to imposition or which has been imposed under this section. If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become final, the Secretary may refer the matter to the Attorney General for collection.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 512. There are authorized to be appropriated for those fiscal years which begin on or after October 1, 1984, such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act.

Subtitle B—Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COMPREHENSIVE OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY TRUST FUND

SEC. 513. (a) The Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund is established as a nonprofit corporate entity. The Trust Fund shall consist of—

(1) fees paid into the Trust Fund under section 514,

(2) amounts recovered or collected on behalf of the Trust Fund under subtitle A of this Act, and

(3) amounts transferred to the Trust Fund under sections 521(f) and 521(g) of this Act.

(b) The Trust Fund shall be administered by a Board of Directors under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

(c)(1) The Board of Directors shall consist of nine voting directors appointed by the Secretary as follows—

(A) three shall be representatives of persons who are liable for fees imposed under this title;

(B) three shall be individuals (including, but not limited to, representatives of any State or political subdivision thereof) who are potential claimants under paragraph (2), (4), or (5) of section 503(b) of this Act; and

(C) three shall be individuals from the general public, who are not eligible for appointment under subparagraph (A), and who have particular expertise, knowledge, and experience in the field of oil spill liability and compensation (including, but not limited to, environmental or labor representatives or guarantors).

(2) Not more than five voting directors shall be members of any one political party. All directors shall be citizens of the United States.

(3) The term of office of each director shall be six years, except that of the directors first appointed three shall be appointed for terms of two years, three shall be appointed for terms of four years, and three shall be appointed for terms of six years. Any director appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of that term.

(4) The Secretary or his delegate shall serve as a nonvoting member of the Board of Directors.

(5) The levels of compensation of the Board of Directors shall be fixed initially by the Secretary and may be adjusted from time to time upon recommendation by the Board of Directors and concurrence of the Secretary. Any member of the Board of Directors who is an officer or employee of the United States, and any other member of the Board of Directors who is prohibited by the terms of his employment from receiving additional compensation, shall receive no additional compensation on account of that member's service on the Board of Directors.

(6) Any director may be removed from office by the Secretary only for neglect of duty, malfeasance in office, or incompetence, or if the director no longer qualifies to be a director under paragraph (1).

(7) The Board of Directors shall meet at least once a year. A majority of the voting members of the Board of Directors shall constitute a quorum, and any action by the Board of Directors shall be effected by majority vote of the voting members of the Board of Directors.

(8) All meetings of the Board of Directors held to conduct official business of the Trust Fund shall be open to public observation and shall be preceded by reasonable public notice. The Board of Directors may close a meeting if the meeting is likely to disclose—

(A) information the premature disclosure of which would be likely to lead to speculation in investments of the Trust Fund; or

(B) information which is likely to adversely affect financial or securities markets or institutions.

(9) The determination to close any meeting of the Board of Directors for any of the purposes specified in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (7) shall be made in a meeting of the Board of Directors open to public observation preceded by reasonable notice. The Board of Directors shall prepare minutes of any meeting which is closed to the public and such minutes shall be made promptly available to the public, except for those portions thereof which, in the judgment of the Board of Directors, may be withheld under the provisions of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (7).

(d)(1) The Board of Directors shall appoint a chief executive officer of the Trust Fund who shall be responsible for the administration of the Trust Fund.

(2) The Board of Directors shall—

(A) establish the offices and appoint the officers of the Trust Fund and define their duties;

(B) fix the compensation of individual officer positions and categories of other employees of the Trust Fund taking into consideration the rates of compensation in effect under the Executive Schedule and the General Schedule prescribed by subchapters II and III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code for comparable positions or categories. If the Board of Directors determines that is is necessary to fix the compensation of any officer position or category of other positions at a rate or rates in excess of that prescribed for level I of the Executive Schedule under section 5312 of title 5, the Board of Directors may transmit to the Secretary its recommendations with respect to the rates of compensation it deems advisable for such positions and categories. Such recommendations shall become effective at the beginning of the first pay period which begins after the thirtieth day following the transmittal of such recommendations unless the Secretary has specifically disapproved such recommendation and notified the Board of Directors to such effect; and

(C) provide a system of organization to fix responsibility and promote efficiency.

(3) Except as specifically provided herein, directors, officers, and employees of the Trust Fund shall not be subject to any law of the United States relating to governmental employment.

(4) The chief executive officer shall appoint such employees as may be necessary for the transaction of the Trust Fund's business to, and may discharge such employees from, positions established in accordance with this section.

(5) No political test or qualification shall be used in selecting, appointing, promoting, or taking other personnel actions with respect to officers, agents, and employees of the Trust Fund, except as provided in subsection (c)(1) of this section.

(6) The Board of Directors may provide for reimbursement of directors, officers, and employees for travel expenses and per diem.

(e) The Trust Fund and its income and property shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, except that—

(1) any real property owned in fee by the Trust fund shall be subject to State, territorial, county, municipal, or other local taxation to the same extent, according to its value, as other similarly situated and used real property, without discrimination in the valuation, classification, or assessment thereof; and

(2) the Trust Fund and its employees shall be subject to any nondiscriminatory payroll and employment taxes intended to finance benefits based upon employment (such as social security and unemployment benefits) to the same extent as any privately owned corporation.

(f) The Trust Fund shall have the power to sue and be sued in its own name and to exercise all other lawful powers necessarily or reasonable related to the establishment of the Trust Fund and the exercise of its functions and duties under this Act.

(g)(1) The Trust Fund shall have an independent annual audit prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles.

(2) Not later than one hundred and twenty days after the end of each fiscal year of the Trust Fund, the Trust Fund shall submit to the Congress and the Secretary an annual report containing the audit prepared under paragraph (1) and information regarding the organization, procedures, and activities of the Trust Fund during the preceding fiscal year.

(h) The principal office of the Trust Fund shall be located in the District of Columbia.

(i) Except to the extent expressly provided herein, the Trust Fund shall not be deemed to be an agency of the United States or an instrumentality of the United States.

(j) This title shall be considered the articles of incorporation for the Trust Fund.

FUND COLLECTIONS

SEC. 514. (a) A fee of 1.3 cents a barrel shall be paid into the Trust Fund by the owner of—

(1) oil received at a United States refinery;

(2) oil entered into the United States for consumption, use, or warehousing; and

(3) oil produced from a well located in the United States which is used in or exported from the United States.

(b) The Secretary, in consultation with the Trust Fund, shall by regulation establish procedures for the collection of the fee imposed by subsection (a).

(c) The fee imposed by subsection (a) shall only be in effect during those times when the amount in the Trust Fund (including the value of any securities held by the Trust Fund pursuant to section 515(b)) is less than $200,000,000.

(d) No fee shall be collected under this section with respect to any oil if the person who would be liable for the fee established that a prior fee has been imposed by this section with respect to that oil.

(e) The Trust Fund may bring an action in the district court of the United States for the collection of any fee required to be paid under this section.

(f) Any person who fails to collect or pay any fee as required by this section shall be liable for a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000, to be assessed by the Secretary of Transportation, in addition to the fee required to be collected or paid and the interest on such fee in an amount equal to the amount such fee would have earned if collected or paid when due and invested in accordance with subsection (b) of section 515. Upon the failure of any person so liable to pay any penalty, fee, or interest upon demand, the Attorney General may, at the request of the Secretary of Transportation, bring an action in the name of the Fund against that person for such amount.

TRUST FUND DISBURSEMENT AND INVESTMENT

SEC. 515. (a) The Trust Fund shall be available, subject to appropriations, for the purposes of—

(1) immediate payment of removal costs described in section 501(b)(24)(A) and of reasonable costs incurred by the trustee under section 503(a)(3) in assessing damaged natural resources and preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged natural resources;

(2) the payment of claims under Subtitle A of this Act for damage which is not otherwise compensated;

(3) the costs of administration of this Act; and

(4) the payment of initial and annual contributions to the International Fund in accordance with section 525 of this Act.

(b) All sums not needed for purposes of subsection (a) shall be invested prudently in income producing securities approved by the Secretary in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary. Income from these securities shall be added to the principal of the Trust Fund, except that whenever the amount in the Trust Fund (including the value of such securities) exceeds $300,000,000, the amount of any income from such securities shall be rebated, subject to appropriations, on a pro rata basis to the owners of the oil who contributed fees to the Trust Fund. If any owner no longer exists or income cannot otherwise be rebated after due diligence to do so, the income shall be retained by the Trust Fund.

LIMITATION ON PAYMENT OF CLAIMS BY THE TRUST FUND

SEC. 516. (a) No amount in the trust Fund may be used to pay any claim, other than a claim for removal costs, to the extent that the payment of that claim would reduce the amount in the Trust Fund to an amount less than $30,000,000.

(b) If at any time the Trust Fund is unable by reason of subsection (a) to pay all of the claims, other than for removal costs, payable at that time, those claims shall, to the extent permitted under subsection (a), be paid in full in the order in which they were finally determined. Subject to approval of the Secretary, the Trust Fund may borrow amounts from any commercial credit source, at the best available terms, for purposes of paying such claims in such order.

(c) The liability of the Trust Fund under this Act with respect to one incident shall not exceed $100,000,000. If the Trust Fund is unable by reason of the preceding sentence to pay all claims with respect to the incident, the claims shall be reduced proportionately.

ANNUAL AUDIT REVIEW

SEC. 517. The Comptroller General shall review the audit required by section 513(g)(1) and shall submit a report of its review to Congress.

COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS OF THIS ACT

SEC. 518. (a) If any provision of this Act provides that the balance in any fund (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as the "transferor fund") is to be transferred to the Trust Fund, any claim which arises before October 1, 1984 (to the extent such claim would have been payable out of the transferor fund), shall be payable, subject to appropriations, out of the Trust Fund notwithstanding any of the limitations imposed by this title.

(b)(1) If the Secretary or his delegate determines that there is a TAP fund deficit, the fee imposed by section 514(a) on oil first transported through the Trans-Alaska Pipeline after the date of such determination shall be increased by 2 cents per barrel until the total amount of the increased fee equals such deficit.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the term "TAP fund deficit" means the excess (if any) of—

(A) the amount certified by the Secretary of the Interior as the total amount of the claims outstanding against the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund under section 521(b)(2) of this Act, over

(B) the total amount of the assets of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund as of the effective date of this section.

DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES

SEC. 519. (a) For purposes of this title, the term "United States" includes the outer Continental Shelf and any foreign trade zone of the United States.

(b) In the case of any United States refinery which produces natural gasoline from natural gas, the gasoline so produced shall be treated as received at the refinery at the time so produced.

(c) In the case of a fraction of a barrel, the fee imposed by section 514(a) of this title shall be the same fraction of the amount of the fee imposed on a whole barrel.

Subtitle C—Regulations, Effective Dates, and Savings Provisions

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 520. (a) This section, section 501, section 502, section 512, subtitle B (other than section 514 (a), (c), (d), (e), and (f), section 515, and section 516), section 522, and each provision subtitle A that authorizes the promulgation of regulations shall be effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) Subtitle D shall take effect on the first date on which both the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage and the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage are in force with respect to the United States.

(c) All other provisions of subtitles A through D and the regulations issued thereunder, shall be effective on the one hundred and eightieth day after the date of enactment of this Act, except that the penalty prescribed by section 511 for failure to comply with the requirements of section 505 or the regulations issued thereunder shall not be effective until the ninetieth day after issuance of those regulations of the two hundred and seventieth day after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is earlier.

(d) Any regulation respecting financial responsibility, issued pursuant to any provision of law repealed by section 521 of this title, and in effect on the day immediately preceding the effective date of section 521 of this title shall remain in force until superseded by regulations issued under subtitle A of this Act.

CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 521. (a) The first sentence of subsection (b) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act (43 U.S.C 1653(b); 87 Stat. 586) is amended by inserting "in the State of Alaska" after "any area" and by inserting "related to the trans-Alaska oil pipeline" after "any activities". Such subsection is further amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "This subsection shall not apply to removal costs resulting from oil pollution as that term is defined in section 501(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(b)(1) Subsection (c) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act is repealed. All assets of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund, as of the effective date of this section, except for assets equal to the total amount of claims certified by the Secretary under paragraph (2) of this subsection, shall be rebated, subject to appropriations, directly to the operator of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline for payment on a pro rata basis to the owners of the oil at the time it was loaded on the vessel. The Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund under terms of subsection (c) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, and shall assume all liability incurred by the officers or trustees in the execution of their duties involving the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund, other than the liability of those officers or trustees for gross negligence or willful misconduct.

(2) The Secretary of the Interior shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the total amount of the claims outstanding against the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund not later than one hundred and eighty days after the effective date of this section. In the event that the total amount of the actual claims settled is less than the total amount of the outstanding claims certified, the difference between these amounts shall be rebated directly to the operator of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline for payment, on a pro rata basis, to the owners of the oil at the time it was loaded on the vessel.

(c) Section 17 of the Intervention on the High Seas Act (33 U.S.C. 1486; 88 Stat. 10) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. The fund established under Subtitle B of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act shall be available to the Secretary for actions and activities relating to oil pollution (as defined in section 501(b) of that Act) taken under section 5 of this Act. The fund established under section 311(k) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act shall be available for actions and activities relating to other pollution taken under section 5 of this Act.".

(d) Section 31 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (17) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following new paragraph:

"(18) 'person in charge' means the individual immediately responsible for the operation of a vessel or facility.".

(2) Paragraph (5) of subsection (b) is amended in the last sentence by inserting after "person" the following: "or his employer".

(3) Subparagraph (A) of paragraph (6) of subsection (b) is amended—

(A) in the first and second sentences, by striking out "or person in charge" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "person in charge, or employer of such person in charge"; and

(B) in the third sentence, by striking out "the owner or operator" and inserting in lieu thereof "whoever being".

(4) Subparagraph (B) of paragraph (6) of subsection (b) is amended in the first and second sentences by striking out "or person in charge" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "person in charge, or employer of such person in charge".

(5) Subsection (c)(2)(H) is amended by striking out "from the fund established under subsection (k) of this section for the reasonable costs incurred in such removal" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "for the reasonable costs incurred in such removal (i) from the fund established under section 513 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act in the case of any discharge from a vessel of petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom, or from a facility (as defined by subtitle A of such Act or (ii) from the fund established under subsection (k) of this section in any other case".

(6)(A) Subsection (d) is amended by inserting immediately before the last sentence the following: "Any expense incurred under this subsection or under the Intervention on the High Seas Act (or the convention defined in section 2(3) thereof) as the result of the discharge or imminent discharge from a vessel of petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom, shall be reimbursed from the fund established under section 513 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(B) Subsection (d) is further amended by striking out "Any" in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "Any other".

(7) Subsection (f)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the first place it appears and by striking out "carrying oil" and inserting in lieu thereof "carrying such oil".

(8) Subsection (f)(3) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined by section 501(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the first place it appears.

(9)(A) The first sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the second place it appears, by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 501(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the first place it appears.

(B) The second sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 501(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the second place it appears.

(C) The third sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "such" before "oil" the first place it appears and by striking out "carrying oil" and inserting in lieu thereof "carrying such oil".

(10)(A) Subsection (i)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 501(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the second place it appears.

(B) Subsection (i)(2) is repealed and paragraph (3) of subsection (i) (and all references thereto) is redesignated as paragraph (2).

(11) Subsection (p)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the first place it appears.

(e) The Deepwater Port Act of 1974 (33 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.; 88 Stat. 2126) is amended as follows:

(1) Section 4(c)(1) is amended by striking out "section 18(l) of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 505 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act".

(2) Subsections (b), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (l), and (n) of section 18 are repealed.

(3) Paragraph (3) of subsection (c) of section 18 is amended by striking out "Deepwater Port Liability Fund established pursuant to subsection (f) of this section." and inserting in lieu thereof "fund established under subtitle B of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(4) Subsection (k) of section 18 is amended to read as follows:

"(k) This section shall not be interpreted to preclude any State from imposing additional requirements, not inconsistent with the provisions of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act, for any discharge of oil from a deepwater port or a vessel within any safety zone.".

(5) Subsections (c), (k), and (m) of section 18 are redesignated as subsections (b), (c), and (d), respectively.

(f) Any amounts remaining in the Deepwater Port Liability Fund established by section 18(f) of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 shall, subject to appropriations, be deposited in the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund established by subtitle B of this Act. The Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Deepwater Port Liability Fund under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974.

(g) Title III of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978 (Public Law 95-372) is repealed. Any amounts remaining in the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund established under section 302 of that title shall, subject to appropriations, be deposited in the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund established by subtitle B of this Act. The Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund under title III of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 522. In any provision of this Act or the applicability thereof is held invalid, the remainder of this Act shall not be affected thereby.

Subtitle D—Implementation of Conventions

RECOGNITION OF THE INTERNATIONAL FUND

SEC. 523. The International Oil Pollution Compensation Fund (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "International Fund") established by article 2 of the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "International Fund Convention") is recognized under the laws of the United States as a legal person and shall have the capacity under the laws of the United States to contract, to acquire and dispose of real and personal property, and to institute and be a party to legal proceedings. The Director of the International Fund is recognized as the legal representative of the International Fund. The Director shall be deemed to have appointed irrevocably the Secretary of State his agent for service of process in any action against the International Fund in any court in the United States.

SERVICE OF PROCESS AND INTERVENTION

SEC. 524. (a) In any action brought in a court in the United States against the owner of a ship or his guarantor under the International Convention of Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "Civil Liability Convention"), the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, shall serve a copy of the complaint and any subsequent pleading therein upon the International Fund and the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund at the same time the complaint or other pleading is served upon the opposing parties.

(b) The International Fund may intervene as a party as a matter of right in any action brought in a court in the United States against the owner of a ship or his guarantor under the Civil Liability Convention.

(c) If the International Fund has been served a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings in an action referred to in subsection (a) of this section, the International Fund shall be bound by any judgment entered therein, whether or not the International Fund was a party to the action.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION

SEC. 525. The International Fund and its assets shall be exempt from all direct taxation in the United States.

PAYMENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS

SEC. 526. The amount of any initial or annual contribution to the International Fund which is required to be made under article 10 of the International Fund Convention by any person with respect to oil received in any port, terminal installation, or other installation located in the United States shall be paid to the International Fund by the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund. Before the International Fund Convention enters into force with respect to the United States, the President shall make, and deposit with the Secretary-General of the International Maritime Organization, a declaration under article 14 of the International Fund Convention that the United States assumes the obligation to pay contributions under article 10 of such Convention in respect of oil received within the territory of the United States and that such amount will be paid from the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability-Trust Fund.

JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURTS

SEC. 527. (1) The United States district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of—

(1) all controversies arising in the territory, including the territorial sea, of the United States under the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention, and without regard to the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy.

(2) all controversies arising outside of the territory, including the territorial sea, of the United States under the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention, from an incident which causes damage in the territory of the United States, including the territorial sea,

(b) Venue shall lie in any district wherein the injury complained of occurred, or wherein the defendant resides, may be found, or has his principal office. For purposes of this subsection, the International Fund shall reside in the District of Columbia.

RECOGNITION OF JUDGMENTS

SEC. 528. Any final judgment of a court of any nation which is a party to the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention in an action for compensation under either such convention shall be recognized by any court of the United States or of a State when that judgment has become enforceable in such nation and is no longer subject to ordinary forms of review, except where—

(1) the judgment was obtained by fraud; or

(2) the defendant was not given reasonable notice and a fair opportunity to present his case.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

SEC. 529. (a) The owner of each ship which is documented under the laws of the United States and is carrying more than two thousand tons of oil in bulk of cargo shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility in amounts sufficient to cover the maximum liability of such owner for pollution damage arising from one incident under the Civil Liability Convention. The Secretary shall issue a certification to each such owner who complies with this paragraph, in the form and manner required by the Civil Liability Convention.

(b) With respect to any ship owned by the United States, the Secretary shall issue a certificate stating that the ship is owned by the United States and that the ship's liability is covered within the limits of liability prescribed by the Civil Liability Convention.

(c) The owner of each ship (other than a ship to which subsection (a) or (b) applies), wherever registered, which is carrying more than two thousand tons of oil in bulk as cargo and which enters or leaves a port or offshore terminal in the United States (including the territorial seas) shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility in amounts sufficient to cover the maximum liability of such owner for pollution damage arising from one incident under the Civil Liability Convention. The owner of a ship which is registered in, or flying the flag of, a nation which is a party to the Civil Liability Convention shall be considered to have met the requirements of this paragraph if the ship is carrying a certificate issued by such nation attesting that insurance or other financial security is in force which meets the requirements of such Convention.

(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall withhold or revoke the clearance required by section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of any ship which does not have a certificate showing compliance with the requirements of financial responsibility under subsection (a) or (c) of this section.

(e) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may (1) deny entry to any facility, to any port or place in the United States, or to the navigable waters, or (2) detain at the facility or at the port or place in the United States, any vessel subject to this section that, upon request, does not produce the certificate required under this section or regulations issued hereunder.

(f) Any person who, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, is found to have failed to comply with the requirements of this section or the regulations issued under this section or with any denial or detention order shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty, not to exceed $10,000 for each violation. The amount of the civil penalty shall be assessed by the Secretary by written notice. In determining the amount of such penalty, the Secretary shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the prohibited acts committed and, with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require. The Secretary may compromise, modify, or remit with or without conditions any civil penalty which is subject to imposition or which has been imposed under this subsection. If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become final, the Secretary may refer the matter to the Attorney General for collection.

WAIVER OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY

SEC. 530. The United States waives all defenses based on its status as a sovereign State with respect to any controversy arising under the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention relating to any ship owned by the United States and used for commercial purposes.

DEFINITION OF FRANC

SEC. 531. Notwithstanding any provision of the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention to the contrary, one franc equals one-fifteenth of a special drawing right, as defined by the International Monetary Fund, for purposes of applying such conventions.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 532. The Secretary may issue such rules and regulations as are necessary to implement the Civil Liability Convention and the International Fund Convention.

(Amendment No. 13 to committee print.)

—Add a new title V as follows and redesignate the existing title V as title VI:

TITLE V—OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY AND COMPENSATION

Subtitle A—Short Title and Definitions

SEC. 501. (a) Subtitles A-D may be cited as the "Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act."

(b) For the purposes of this Act, the term—

(1) "barrel" means forty-two United States gallons at sixty degrees Fahrenheit;

(2) "claim" means a demand in writing for a sum certain;

(3) "cleanup costs" means costs of reasonable measures taken, after an incident has occurred, to prevent, minimize, or mitigate oil pollution from that incident;

(4) "discharge" means any emission, intentional or unintentional, and includes spilling, leaking, pumping, pouring, emptying, or dumping;

(5) "facility" means a structure, or group of structures, which is either—

(A) located, in whole or in part, on the outer Continental Shelf and used for the purposes of exploring for, drilling for, producing, storing, handling, transferring, processing, or transporting oil produced from the outer Continental Shelf, or

(B) licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974;

(6) "foreign claimant" means any person residing in a foreign country, the government of a foreign country, or any agency or political subdivision thereof, who asserts a claim;

(7) "guarantor" means the person, other than the responsibility party, who provides evidence of financial responsibility for a responsible party;

(8) "incident" means any occurrence or series of occurrences having the same origin, involving one or more vessels, facilities, or any combination thereof, which causes, or poses a substantial threat, of oil pollution;

(9) "inland oil barge" means a non-self-propelled vessel, carrying oil in bulk as cargo or in residue from cargo and certificated to operate only on the internal waters of the United States while operating in such waters;

(10) "internal waters of the United States" means those waters of the United States lying inside the baseline from which the territorial sea is measured and those waters outside that baseline which are a part of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway;

(11) "lessee" means a person holding a leasehold interest in an oil and gas lease on submerged lands of the outer Continental Shelf granted or maintained under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(12) "licensee" means a person holding a license issued under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974;

(13) "mobile offshore drilling unit" means every watercraft or other contrivance (other than a public vessel of the United States) capable of use as a means of transportation on water and as a means of drilling for oil on the outer Continental Shelf;

(14) "natural resources" means living and nonliving resources belonging to, managed by, held in trust by, appertaining to, or otherwise controlled by the United States (including the resources of the fishery conservation zone established by the Fishery Conservation and Management Act of 1976), any State or local government, or any foreign government;

(15) "navigable waters" means the waters of the United States, including the territorial sea;

(16) "oil" means petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom;

(17) "oil pollution" means—

(A) the presence of oil which has been discharged from a vessel or facility in quantities which the President had determined may be harmful pursuant to paragraph (4) of subsection (b) of section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act—

(i) in or on the navigable waters or on land within the United States immediately adjacent thereto; or

(ii) in or on the waters of the contiguous zone established by the United States under article 24 of the Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone, or

(B) the presence of oil (other than natural seepage) in or on the waters of the high seas outside the territorial limits of the United States—

(i) when discharged in connection with activities conducted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(ii) when discharged from a deepwater port licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 or from a vessel transiting to or from a deepwater port and located in a safety zone of a deepwater port licensed under such Act;

(iii) causing injury to or loss of natural resources belonging to, appertaining to, or under the exclusive management authority of, the United States; or

(iv) when discharged, prior to being brought ashore in a port in the United States, from a ship that received oil at the terminal of the pipeline constructed under the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act (43 U.S.C. 1651 et seq.) for transportation to a port in the United States; or

(C) the presence of oil (other than natural seepage) in or on the territorial sea, internal waters, or adjacent shoreline, of a foreign country, in a case where damages are recoverable by a foreign claimant under section 503(b)(6) of this title; (18) "operator" means—

(A) in the case of a vessel, a charterer by demise or any other person, except the owner, who is responsible for the operation, manning, victualing, and supplying of the vessel; or

(B) in the case of a pipeline, any person, except the owner, who is responsible for the operation of such pipeline by agreement with the owner;

(19) "outer Continental Shelf" has the meaning set forth in subsection (a) of section 2 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(20) "owner" means, in the case of a vessel or a pipeline, any person holding title to, or in the absence of title, any other indicia of ownership of, the vessel or pipeline, whether by lease, permit, contract, license, or other form of agreement, except that such term does not include a person who, without participating in the management or operation of a vessel or a pipeline, holds indicia of ownership primarily to protect his security interest in the vessel or pipeline;

(21) "permittee" means a person holding an authorization, license, or permit for geological exploration issued under section 11 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(22) "person" means an individual, firm, corporation, association, partnership, consortium, joint venture, or any other commercial, legal, or governmental entity;

(23) "public vessel" means a vessel which—

(A) is owned or chartered by demise, and operated by (i) the United States, (ii) a State or political subdivision thereof; or (iii) a foreign government, and

(B) is not engaged in commercial service;

(24) "removal costs" means—

(A) costs incurred under subsection (c), (d), or (l) of section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, section 5 of the Intervention on the High Seas Act, or subsection (b) of section 18 of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974, and

(B) cleanup cost, other than the costs described in subparagraph (A);

(25) "responsible party" means—

(A) with respect to a vessel or a pipeline, the owner or operator of such vessel or pipeline;

(B) with respect to a facility (other than a deepwater port or pipeline), the lessee or permittee of the area in which such facility is located, or the holder of a right of use and easement granted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act for the area in which such facility is located where such holder is a different person than the lessee or permittee; and

(C) with respect to a deepwater port, the licensee;

(26) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation;

(27) "ship" means a vessel (other than an inland oil barge) carrying oil in bulk as cargo or in residue from cargo;

(28) "Trust Fund" means the fund established by Subtitle B of this Act;

(29 "United States" and "State" include the several States of the United States" and "State" include the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States;

(30) "United States claimant" means any person residing in the United States, the Government of the United States or any agency thereof, or the government of a State or a political subdivision thereof, who asserts a claim; and

(31) "vessel" means every description of watercraft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water.

COORDINATION WITH INTERNATIONAL CONVENTIONS

SEC. 502. On an after the first date on which both the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage and the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage are in force with respect to the United States, this title shall not apply with respect to damage arising out of or directly resulting from oil pollution or a substantial threat of oil pollution to the extent this title is inconsistent with such conventions and subtitle D of this Act.

DAMAGES AND CLAIMANTS

SEC. 503. (a) Claims for damages for economic loss, incurred on or after the effective date of this section and arising out of or directly resulting from oil pollution or the substantial threat of oil pollution, may be asserted for—

(1) removal costs;

(2) injury to, or destruction of, real or personal property;

(3) injury to, or destruction of, natural resources, including reasonable costs incurred by the trustee of the damaged resources in assessing both short-term and long-term injury to, or destruction of, the damaged resources, preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged resources, and restoring or acquiring the equivalent of the damaged resources;

(4) loss of subsistence use of natural resources;

(5) loss of profits or impairment of earning capacity due to injury or destruction of real or personal property or natural resources to the extent that such damages were sustained during two-year period beginning on the date the claimant first suffered such loss; and

(6) loss of tax revenue for a period of one year due to injury to real or personal property.

(b)(1) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) by any claimant, except that the responsible party with respect to a vessel or facility involved in an incident may assert such a claim only if he can show that he is entitled to a defense to liability under section 504(c) of this title or, if not entitled to such a defense to liability, that he is entitled to a limitation of liability under section 504(b) of this title, in which case the claim may be asserted only to the extent that the sum of the removal costs incurred by the responsible party plus the amounts paid by the responsible party or by the guarantor on behalf of the responsible party for claims asserted under subsection (a) of this section exceeds the amount to which the total of the liability under section 504(a) and removal costs incurred by, or on behalf of, the responsible party is limited under section 504(b).

(2) A claim may be asserted under paragraphs (2) and (4) of subsection (a) by any United States claimant, if the property involved is owned or leased, or the natural resource involved is utilized, by the claimant.

(3) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (3) of subsection (a) by the President, as trustee for natural resources over which the United States Government has sovereign rights or exercises exclusive management authority, or by the Governor of any State for natural resources within the boundary of the State belonging to, managed by, controlled by, or appertaining to the State. Compensation paid under this paragraph may be used only for assessing both short-term and long-term injury to, or destruction of, the damaged resources, preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged resources, and restoring or acquiring the equivalent of the damaged resources.

(4) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (5) of subsection (a) by any United States claimant if the claimant derives at least 25 per centum of his earnings from activities which utilize the property or natural resource or, if such activities are seasonal in nature, 25 per centum of the claimant's earnings during the season in which such activities took place.

(5) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (6) of subsection (a) by any State or political subdivision thereof.

(6) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, a claim may be asserted under paragraphs (2), (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (a) by a foreign claimant to the same extent that a United States claimant may assert a claim if—

(A) the oil pollution occurred in the waters, including the territorial sea, or adjacent shoreline of a foreign country of which the claimant is a resident;

(B) the claimant is not otherwise compensated for his loss;

(C) the oil was discharged from a vessel located within the navigable waters, was discharged in connection with activities conducted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, or was discharged from a deepwater port licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 or a vessel transitting to or from a deepwater port and located in a safety zone of a deepwater port under such Act; and

(D) recovery is authorized by a treaty or an executive agreement between the United States and the foreign country of which the claimant is a resident, or the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Attorney General and other appropriate officials, certifies that such country provides a comparable remedy for United States claimants.

In the case of any oil pollution involving oil that has been transported through the pipeline constructed under the provisions of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, has been loaded on a vessel for transportation to a port in the United States, and is discharged from such vessel before being unloaded in that port, a claim may be asserted by a resident of Canada without regard to subparagraphs (A), (C), and (D) of this paragraph, to the same extent that a United States claimant may assert a claim.

(7) A claim may be asserted under any paragraph of subsection (a), by the Attorney General, on his own motion or at the request of the Secretary, on behalf of any group of United States claimants who may assert a claim under this subsection.

(c) If the Attorney General fails to act under paragraph (7) of subsection (b) within sixty days after the date on which the Secretary designates a source under section 506, any member of a group may assert a claim for damages on behalf of that group. Failure of the Attorney General to act shall have no bearing on any claim for damages asserted under this section.

LIABILITY

SEC. 504. (a)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection and subsections (b) and (c) of this section, the responsible party with respect to a facility or a vessel (other than a public vessel) that is the source of oil pollution, or poses a substantial threat of oil pollution in circumstances that justify the incurrence of the type of costs described in section 501(b)(24)(A) of this title, shall be jointly, severally, and strictly liable for all damages for which a claim may be asserted under section 503.

(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, in any case in which a mobile offshore drilling unit is being used as a facility and is the source of oil pollution originating on or above the surface of the water or poses the substantial threat of such oil pollution, such unit shall be deemed to be a vessel which is a ship for purposes of this title.

(B) To the extent that damages for which claims may be asserted under section 503 from any incident described in subparagraph (A) exceed the amount for which the responsible party is liable under subparagraph (A) (as such amount may be limited under subsection (b)(2) of this section), the mobile offshore drilling unit shall be deemed to be a facility covered by subsection (b)(4) of this section, except that for purposes of applying subsection (b)(4) the amount specified in such subsection shall be reduced by the amount for which the responsible party with respect to a ship is liable under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

(C) In the case of any incident described in subparagraph (A) which is caused primarily by willful misconduct or gross negligence within the privity or knowledge of both the owner or operator of the mobile offshore drilling unit and the lessee or permittee of the area, or holder of a right of use or easement for the area, in which such unit is located; or which is caused primarily by a violation within the privity or knowledge of both such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder of applicable safety, construction, or operating standards or regulations of the United States; or with respect to which both such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder fail or refuse to report the incident where required by law or to provide all reasonable cooperation and assistance requested by the responsible Federal official in furtherance of cleanup activities, such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder shall be jointly, severally, and strictly liable (without limitation under subsection (b)) for all loss for which a claim may be asserted under section 503 of this title.

(b) Except when the incident is caused primarily by willful misconduct or gross negligence within the privity or knowledge of a responsible party, or is caused primarily by a violation within the privity or knowledge of a responsible party of applicable safety, construction, or operating standards or regulations of the United States; and except when a responsible party fails or refuses to report the incident where required by law or to provide all reasonable cooperation and assistance requested by the responsible Federal official in futherance of cleanup activities, the total of the liability under subsection (a) of this section and any removal costs incurred by, or on behalf of, such responsible party shall be limited to—

(1) in the case of a vessel other than a ship or an inland oil barge, $150 per gross ton;

(2) in the case of a ship, $1,000,000 or $400 per gross ton, whichever is greater (but not to exceed $40,000,000);

(3) in the case of an inland oil barge, $150,000 or $150 per gross ton, whichever is greater; or

(4) in the case of a facility, $50,000,000.

The Secretary shall, from time to time, report to Congress the desirability of adjusting the limitations of liability specified in this subsection.

(c)(1) Except when the responsible party has failed or refused to report an incident where required by law, there shall be no liability under subsection (a) of this section if such responsible party proves that the incident—

(A) resulted from an act of war, hostilities, civil war, insurrection, or a natural phenomenon of an exceptional, inevitable, and irresistible character, or

(B) was wholly caused by an act or omission of a person other than—

(i) a responsible party;

(ii) an employee or agent of a responsible party; or

(iii) one whose act or omission occurs in connection with a contractual relationship with a responsible party.

(2) There shall be no liability under subsection (a) of this section—

(A) as to a particular claimant, where the incident or economic loss is caused, in whole or in part, by the gross negligence or willful misconduct of that claimant; or

(B) as to a particular claimant, to the extent that the incident or economic loss is caused by the negligence of that claimant.

(d)(1) Except as provided in subtitle B, the Trust Fund shall be liable for damages for which claims may be asserted under section 503 of this title and which are presented under this title, to the extent that the loss is not otherwise compensated.

(2) Except for the removal costs specified in section 501(b)(24)(A) of this title, there shall be no liability under paragraph (1) of this subsection—

(A) where the incident is caused wholly by an act of war, hostilities, civil war, or insurrection;

(B) as to a particular claimant, where the incident or the economic loss is caused, in whole or in part, by the gross negligence or willful misconduct of that claimant; or

(C) as to a particular claimant, to the extent that the incident or the economic loss is caused by the negligence of that claimant.

(e)(1) In addition to the damages for which claims may be asserted under section 503 of this title, and without regard to any limitation of liability provided in subsection (b) of this section, the responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel, or his guarantor (subject to the guarantor's limitation set forth in subsection (d) of section 505 of this title), shall be liable to the claimant for interest on the amount paid in satisfaction of the claim for the period from the date upon which the claim was presented to the responsible party or guarantor to the date upon which the claimant is paid, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the responsible party or guarantor shall offer to the claimant an amount equal to or greater than that finally paid in satisfaction of the claim to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that amount, inclusive. However, if the responsible party or guarantor shall offer to the claimant, within sixty days of the date upon which the claim was presented, or of the date upon which advertising was commenced pursuant to section 506 of this title, whichever is later, an amount equal to or greater than that finally paid in satisfaction of the claim, the responsible party or guarantor shall be liable for the interest provided in this paragraph only from the date the offer was accepted by the claimant to the date upon which payment is made to the claimant, inclusive.

(2) The interest provided in paragraph (1) shall be calculated at the average of the highest rate for commercial and finance company paper of maturities of one hundred and eighty days or less obtaining on each of the days included within the period for which interest must be paid to the claimant, as published in the Federal Reserve bulletin.

(f)(1) A responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel may not transfer the liability imposed under this section to any other person.

(2) Nothing in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall preclude an agreement whereby a person who, by an agreement with a responsible party with respect to a facility utilized in activities under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, is engaged in such activities, agrees to indemnify the responsible party for the liability imposed under subsection (a) of this section. Nothing in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall preclude an agreement whereby a person who owns or operates a towing vessel, by an agreement with a responsible party with respect to a non-self-propelled vessel, agrees to indemnify the responsible party for the liability imposed under subsection (a) of this section.

(g) Nothing in this title shall bar a cause of action that a responsible party subject to liability under this section or a guarantor has or would have by reason of subrogation or otherwise against any person.

(h) To the extent that it is in conflict with, or otherwise inconsistent with, any other law relating to liability or the limitation thereof, this section supersedes such other law.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

SEC. 505. (a)(1) The responsible party with respect to each vessel (except a public vessel or a non-self-propelled vessel that does not carry oil as cargo or fuel) over three hundred gross tons that uses a facility or the navigable waters shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility sufficient to satisfy the maximum liability under section 504 of this title to which the responsible party would be exposed in a case where he would be entitled to limit his liability in accordance with subsection (b) of section 504 of this title. In cases where a responsible party owns or operates more than one vessel subject to this subsection, evidence of financial responsibility need be established only to meet the maximum liability applicable to the largest of such vessels.

(2) The Secretary of the Treasury shall withhold or revoke the clearance required by section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of any vessel subject to this subsection that does not have the certification required under this subsection or the regulations issued hereunder.

(3) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may (A) deny entry to any facility, to any port or place in the United States, or to the navigable waters, or (B) detain at the facility or at the port or place in the United States, any vessel subject to this subsection that, upon request, does not produce the certification required under this subsection or regulations issued hereunder.

(b) The responsible party with respect to each facility shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility sufficient to satisfy the maximum amount of liability to which the responsible party would be exposed in a case where he would be entitled to limit his liability in accordance with subsection (b) of section 504 of this title. In cases where the responsible party is responsible for more than one facility subject to this subsection, evidence of financial responsibility need be established only to meet the maximum liability applicable to one such facility.

(c) Financial responsibility under this section may be established by any one, or by any combination, of the following methods acceptable to the Secretary: evidence of insurance, surety bond, qualification as a self-insurer, or other evidence of financial responsibility. Any bond filed shall be issued by a bonding company authorized to do business in the United States.

(d) Any claim authorized by section 503(a) of this title may be asserted directly against any guarantor providing evidence of financial responsibility as required under this section for any responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel. In defending against such a claim, the guarantor may invoke all rights and defenses which would be available to the responsible party under this title. He may also invoke the defense that the incident was caused by the willful misconduct of the responsible party, but he may not invoke any other defense that he might be entitled to invoke in proceedings brought by the responsible party against him.

(e) Nothing in this title shall impose liability with respect to an incident on any guarantor for damages or removal costs which exceeds in the aggregate the amount of financial responsibility which that guarantor has provided for each responsible party. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit any other statutory, contractual, or common law liability of a guarantor to any responsible party for whom such guarantor provides evidence of financial responsibility including, but not limited to, the liability of such guarantor for negotiating in bad faith a settlement of any claim.

DESIGNATION AND ADVERTISEMENT

SEC. 506. (a)(1) When the Secretary receives information of an incident that involves oil pollution, he shall, where possible and appropriate, designate the source or sources of the oil pollution and shall immediately notify the responsible party and the guarantor, if known, of that designation.

(2) When a source designated is a vessel or facility, and the responsible party or guarantor fails to inform the Secretary, within five days after receiving notification of the designation, of his denial of the designation, the responsible party or guarantor, as required by regulations promulgated by the Secretary, shall advertise the designation and the procedures by which claims may be presented to such responsible party or guarantor. If advertisement is not otherwise made in accordance with this paragraph, the Secretary shall, as he finds necessary, and at the expense of the responsible party or the guarantor involved, advertise the designation and the procedures by which claims may be presented to that responsible party or guarantor.

(b) In a case where—

(1) the responsible party and the guarantor both deny a designation in accordance with paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this section.

(2) the source of the discharge was a public vessel, or

(3) the Secretary is unable to designate the source or sources of the discharge under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of this section,

the Secretary shall, in accordance with section 507 of this title, advertise or otherwise notify potential claimants of the procedures by which claims may be presented to the Trust Fund.

(c) Advertisement under subsection (a) shall commence no later than fifteen days from the date of the designation made thereunder and shall continue for a period of no less than thirty days.

CLAIMS SETTLEMENT

SEC. 507. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, all claims shall be presented to the responsible party or guarantor designated under section 506(a) of this title.

(b) Claims may be presented to the Trust Fund—

(1) where the Secretary has advertised or otherwise notified claimants in accordance with section 506(b) of this title; or

(2) where the responsible party may assert a claim under section 503(b)(1) of this title.

(c) In the case of a claim presented in accordance with subsection (a) of this section, and in which—

(1) each person to whom the claim is presented denies all liability for the claim, for any reason, or

(2) the claim is not settled by any person by payment within sixty days of the date upon which (A) the claim was presented, or (B) advertising was commenced pursuant to section 506(a)(2) of this title, whichever is later, the claimant may elect to commence an action in court against the responsible party or guarantor or to present the claim to the Trust Fund, that election to be irrevocable and exclusive.

(d) In the case of a claim presented in accordance with subsection (a) of this section, where full and adequate compensation is unavailable, either because the claim exceeds a limit of liability invoked under section 504 of this title or because the responsible party and his guarantor are financially incapable of meeting their obligations in full, a claim for the uncompensated damages may be presented to the Trust Fund.

(e) In the case of a claim which has been presented to any person under subsection (a) of this section and which is being presented to the Trust Fund under subsection (c) or (d) of this section, that person, at the request of the claimant, shall transmit the claim and supporting documents to the Trust Fund. The Secretary may, by regulation, prescribe the documents to be so transmitted and the terms under which they are to be transmitted.

(f)(1) The Secretary shall establish procedures and standards for the prompt appraisal and settlement of claims against the Trust Fund.

(2) The Secretary may use the facilities and services of private insurance and claims adjusting organizations or State agencies in processing claims against the Trust Fund and may contract for those facilities and services.

(3) To the extent necessitated by extraordinary circumstances, where the services of private organizations or State agencies are inadequate, the Secretary may use Federal personnel, on a reimbursable basis, to process claims against the Trust Fund.

(g) Any claimant, or any other person suffering legal wrong because of, or adversely affected or aggrieved by, a final determination of the Trust Fund with respect to a claim, may bring an action for judicial review of the determination. Such action shall be brought under section 509 and shall be the exclusive judicial remedy with respect to such final determination of the Trust Fund. Such an action shall be filed not later than thirty days after the Trust Fund issues notification of the final determination. Venue for any such action shall lie in any district wherein the claimant resides in addition to any district described in section 509(b). The final determination of the Trust Fund shall not be held unlawful or set aside unless the reviewing court finds such determination to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.

ACTIONS TO ENFORCE LIABILITY

SEC. 508. (a)(1) In any action brought under this title against a responsible party or guarantor, both the plaintiff and defendant shall serve a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings therein upon the Trust Fund at the same time those pleadings are served upon the opposing parties.

(2) The Trust Fund may intervene as a party as a matter of right in any action in which a complaint has been served upon it under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(3) In any action to which the Trust Fund is a party, if the responsible party or his guarantor admits liability under this title, the Trust Fund shall be dismissed therefrom to the extent of the admitted liability.

(4) If the Trust Fund has been served a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings in an action referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Trust Fund shall be bound by any judgment entered therein, whether or not the Trust Fund was a party to the action.

(5) If neither the plaintiff nor the defendant serves a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings upon the Trust Fund in an action referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the limitation of liability otherwise permitted by subsection (b) of section 504 of this title is not available to the defendant, and the plaintiff shall not recover from the Trust Fund any sums not paid by the defendant.

(b) In any action brought against the Trust Fund, the plaintiff may join any responsible party or his guarantor, and the Trust Fund may implead any person, who is or may be liable to the Trust Fund.

(c) No claim may be presented, nor may any action be commenced for damages recoverable under this title, unless that claim is presented to, or that action is commenced against a responsible party or his guarantor or against the Trust Fund, as to their respective liabilities, within three years from the date of discovery of the economic loss for which a claim may be asserted under subsection (a) of section 503 of this title, or within six years of the date of the incident which resulted in that loss, whichever is earlier.

(d) Any person, including the Trust Fund, who compensates any claimant for an economic loss, compensable under section 503, shall be subrogated to all rights, claims, and causes of action which that claimant has under this title.

(e) In any claim or action by the Trust Fund against any responsible party or guarantor under subsection (d), the Trust Fund shall recover—

(1) for a claim presented to the Trust Fund (where there has been a denial of source designation) under section 507(b)(1), or (where there has been denial of liability) under section 507(c)(1)—

(A) subject only to the limitation of liability to which the defendant is entitled under section 504(b), the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant, without reduction;

(B) interest on that amount, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 504(e), from the date upon which the claim was presented by the claimant to the defendant to the date upon which the Trust Fund is paid by the defendant, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the Trust Fund shall offer to the claimant the amount finally paid by the Trust Fund to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim against the Trust Fund to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that offer, inclusive;

(C) all costs incurred by the Trust Fund by reason of the claim, both of the claimant against the Trust Fund and the Trust Fund against the defendant, including, but not limited to, processing costs, investigating costs, court costs, and attorney's fees; and

(2) for a claim presented to the Trust Fund under section 507(c)(2)—

(A) in which the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant exceeds the largest amount, if any, the defendant offered to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim of the claimant against the defendant—

(i) subject to dispute by the defendant as to any excess over the amount offered to the claimant by the defendant, the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant;

(ii) interest, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 504(e), for the period specified in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection; and

(iii) all costs incurred by the Trust Fund by reason of the claim of the Trust Fund against the defendant, including, but not limited to, processing costs, investigating costs, court costs, and attorney's fees; or

(B) in which the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant is less than or equal to the largest amount the defendant offered to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim of the claimant against the defendant—

(i) the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant, without reduction;

(ii) interest, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 504(e), from the date upon which the claim was presented by the claimant to the defendant to the date upon which the defendant offered to the claimant the largest amount referred to in this subclause, except that if the defendant tendered the offer of the largest amount referred to in this subparagraph within sixty days after the date upon which the claim of the claimant was either presented to the defendant or advertising was commenced under section 506, the defendant shall not be liable for interest for that period; and

(iii) interest from the date upon which the claim of the Trust Fund against the defendant was presented to the defendant to the date upon which the Trust Fund is paid, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the defendant shall offer to the Trust Fund the amount finally paid to the Trust Fund in satisfaction of the claim of the Trust Fund to the date upon which the Trust Fund shall accept that offer, inclusive.

(f) The Trust Fund shall pay over to the claimant that portion of any interest the Trust Fund shall recover, under subsection (e)(1) and (e)(2)(A) for the period from the date upon which the claim of the claimant was presented to the defendant to the date upon which the claimant was paid by the Trust Fund, inclusive, less the period from the date upon which the Trust Fund offered to the claimant the amount finally paid to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that offer, inclusive.

(g) The Trust Fund is entitled to recover for all interest and costs specified in subsection (e) without regard to any limitation of liability to which the defendant may otherwise be entitled.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

SEC. 509. (a) The United States distirct courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction over all controversies arising under subtitles A, B, and C of this Act, without regard to the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy.

(b) Unless otherwise provided in this Act, venue shall lie in any district wherein the injury complained of occurred, or wherein the defendant resides, may be found, or has his principal office. For purposes of this section, the Trust Fund shall reside in the District of Columbia.

RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAW

SEC. 510. (a) Except as provided in this title—

(1) no action may be brought in any court of the United States, or of any State or political subdivision thereof, for an economic loss compensable under this title,

(2) no person may be required to contribute to any fund, the purpose of which is to compensate for damages for an economic loss described in section 503(a), except that, for a period of three years beginning on the effective date of this section, any State which on the effective date of this section has in effect a statute that requires such contributions may continue to require such contributions within the limits established by such statute as those limits exist on such date, and

(3) no person may be required to establish or maintain evidence of financial resonsibility relating to the satisfaction of a claim compensable under this title.

(b) Nothing in this Act shall preclude any State from imposing a tax or fee upon any person or upon oil in order to finance the purchase and prepositioning of oil pollution cleanup and removal equipment or to finance other preparations for responding to a discharge of oil which affects such State.

(c) Nothing in subsection (a) shall prohibit an action by the Trust Fund under any other provision of law to recover compensation paid under this title.

PENALTIES

SEC. 511. Any person who, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, is found to have failed to comply with the requirements of section 505 of this title or the regulations issued thereunder or with any denial or detention order shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty, not to exceed $10,000 for each violation. The amount of the civil penalty shall be assessed by the Secretary by written notice. In determining the amount of such penalty, the Secretary shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the prohibited acts committed and, with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require. The Secretary may compromise, modify, or remit with or without conditions, any civil penalty which is subject to imposition or which has been imposed under this section. If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become final, the Secretary may refer the matter to the Attorney General for collection.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 512. There are authorized to be appropriated for those fiscal years which begin on or after October 1, 1985, such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act.

Subtitle B—Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund

SEC. 513. (a) CREATION OF TRUST FUND.—There is established in the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the "Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund" (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "Trust Fund"), consisting of such amounts as may be appropriated or credited to the Trust Fund as provided in this section or as may be transferred to the Trust Fund under this Act.

(b) TRANSFER TO TRUST FUND OF CERTAIN AMOUNTS.—There are hereby appropriated to the Trust Fund amounts determined by the Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "Secretary") to be equivalent to—

(1) the amounts received in the Treasury under section 4611 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (attributable to the rate of tax specified in paragraph (2) of subsection (c) of such section),

(2) the amounts recovered or collected on behalf of the Trust Fund under subtitle A of this Act, and

(3) any penalties imposed under subtitle A of this Act or under section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (insofar as it relates to petroleum oils).

SEC. 514. PURPOSES FOR WHICH TRUST FUND IS AVAILABLE.

(a) EXPENDITURES FROM TRUST FUND.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Amounts in the Trust Fund shall be immediately available to pay those removal costs described in section 501(24)(A) of this Act and in addition shall be available only (A) for purposes of paying claims for compensable damages under Subtitle A of this Act (as in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act), and (B) for initial and annual contributions to the International Oil Pollution Compensation Fund.

(2) CLAIMS INCLUDE CERTAIN EXPENSES.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(A), the amounts payable out of the Trust Fund shall include the costs incurred by the United States by reason of any claim referred to in paragraph (1) (including processing costs, investigating costs, court costs, and attorney fees).

(b) DEFINITION OF COMPENSABLE DAMAGES.—For purposes of this title, the term "compensable damages" means damages claims for which may be asserted under section 503 of this Act.

(c) RESTRICTION ON INTEREST PAYABLE OUT OF TRUST FUND.—No amount in the Trust Fund may be used to pay interest on any claim for any period before the forty-sixth day after the day on which such claim is finally determined.

(d) CERTAIN INTERFUND LOANS PERMITTED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Amounts in either the Trust Fund of the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund established by section 221 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 may be loaned to the other Fund if—

(A) the Secretary (after consultation with the appropriate Federal official) reasonably expects that the amount to be loaned will not be needed by the lending fund for the period of such loan,

(B) interest is payable on such loan at a rate comparable to the investment yield (as of the date of the loan) on interest-bearing obligations of the United States having maturities similar to that of such loan, and

(C) immediately after the making of such loan, the amount in the lending fund equals or exceeds $30,000,000.

(2) APPROPRIATE FEDERAL OFFICIAL.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the appropriate Federal official is—

(A) the Secretary of Transportation in the case of the Trust Fund, and

(B) the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency in the case of the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund.

(3) AMOUNT IN TRUST FUND.—For purposes of this subsection and section 515(a), the amount in the Trust Fund or in the Hazardous Response Trust Fund shall be the sum of any cash in such Fund and any public debt securities held by such Fund.

Sec. 515. limitation on payment of claims by fund.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—No amount in the Trust Fund shall be used to pay any claim (other than a claim for removal costs) to the extent that the payment of such claim would reduce the amount in such Fund to an amount less than $15,000,000.

(b) ORDER IN WHICH UNPAID CLAIMS ARE TO BE PAID.—If at any time the Trust Fund is unable (by reason of subsection (a)) to pay all of the claims (other than for removal costs) payable out of the Trust Fund at such time, such claims shall, to the extent permitted under subsection (a), be paid in full in the order in which they were finally determined.

Sec. 516. liability of united states limited to amount in trust fund.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Any claim for damages filed against the Trust Fund may be paid only out of the Trust Fund. Nothing in this Act (or in any amendment made by this Act) shall authorize the payment by the United States Government of any additional amount for damages with respect to any such claim out of any source other than the Trust Fund.

(b) BORROWING FROM GENERAL FUND OF TREASURY.—

(1) PROHIBITION.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), nothing in this Act (or in any amendment made by this Act) shall be construed to authorize the Trust Fund to borrow any money from the general fund of the Treasury.

(2) BORROWING AUTHORITY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropirated to the Trust Fund, as repayable advances, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the Trust Fund.

(B) LIMITATIONS.—

(i) The maximum aggregate amount which may be appropriated pursuant to subparagraph (A) to the Trust Fund may not exceed $75,000,000.

(ii) No advance may be made under this paragraph after September 30, 1985.

(C) REPAYMENT OF ADVANCES.—Advances made pursuant to this paragraph shall be repaid, and interest on such advances shall be paid, to the general fund of the Treasury when the Secretary determines that moneys are available for such purposes in the Trust Fund. Such interest shall be at rates computed in the same manner as provided in section 517(b)(2) and shall be compounded annually.

SEC. 517. ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

(a) METHOD OF TRANSFER.—The Amounts appropriated by section 513(b) shall be transferred at least monthly from the general fund of the Treasury to the Trust Fund on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the amounts referred to in such section. Proper adjustments shall be made in the amount subsequently transferred to the extent prior estimates were in excess of or less than the amounts required to be transferred.

(b) MANAGEMENT OF THE TRUST FUND.—

(1) REPORT.—The Secretary shall be the trustee of the Trust Fund, and shall report to the Congress for each fiscal year ending on or after September 30, 1985, on the financial condition and the results of the operations of the Trust Fund during that fiscal year and on its expected condition and operations during the next five fiscal years. This report shall be printed as a House document of the session of the Congress to which the report is made.

(2) INVESTMENT.—It shall be the duty of the Secretary to invest such portion of the Trust Fund as is not, in his judgment, required to meet current withdrawals. Such investments shall be in public debt securities with maturities suitable for the needs of the Trust Fund and bearing interest at rates determined by the Secretary, taking into consideration current market yields on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities, adjusted to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per centum. The income on such investment shall be credited to and form a part of the Trust Fund.

SEC. 518. COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS OF THIS ACT.

(a) CERTAIN LIABILITIES ARISING BEFORE OCTOBER 1, 1984.—If any provision of this Act provides that the balance in any fund (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as the "transferor fund") is to be transferred to the Trust Fund, any claim which arises before October 1, 1984 (to the extent such claim would have been payable out of the transferor fund), shall be payable out of the Trust Fund notwithstanding any of the limitations imposed by this title.

(b) ADJUSTMENT IN TAX FOR BALANCE IN TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE LIABILITY FUND.—

(1) TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE FUND DEFICIT.—If the Secretary (or his delegate) determines that there is a trans-Alaska pipeline fund deficit, the tax imposed by section 4611 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (attributable to the rate specified in paragraph (2) of subsection (c) of such section) on crude oil first transported through the trans-Alaska pipeline after the date of such determination shall be increased by 2 cents per barrel until such time as the total amount of such increased tax equals such deficit.

(2) DEFINITION.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term "trans-Alaska pipeline fund deficit" means the excess (if any) of—

(A) the amount certified by the Secretary of the Interior as the total amount of the claims outstanding against the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund under section 521(b)(2), over

(B) the total amount of the assets of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund as of the effective date of this section.

SEC. 519. IMPOSITION OF TAX.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Section 4611 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by striking out "of 0.79 cent a barrel" in subsections (a) and (b) and inserting in lieu thereof (at the rate specified in subsection (c))".

(2) Section 4611 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (d) and (e), respectively, and by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) RATE OF TAX.—The rate of tax imposed by subsection (a) and subsection (b) is the sum of—

"(1) 0.79 cent a barrel, plus

"(2) 1.3 cents a barrel.".

(3) Subsection (e) of section 4611 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (as redesignated by paragraph (2) of this subsection) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) TERMINATION.—

"(1) 0.79 CENT RATE.—The rate of tax specified in paragraph (1) of subsection (c) shall be zero after September 30, 1985, except that if on September 30, 1983 or September 30, 1984—

"(A) the obligated balance in the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund as of such date exceeds $900,000,000, and

"(B) the Secretary, after consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, determines that such unobligated balance will exceed $500,000,000 on September 30 of the following year if no tax is imposed under this section (at the rate specified in paragraph (1) of subsection (c)) or section 4661 during the calendar year following the date referred to above, then no tax shall be imposed by this section during the first calendar year beginning after the date referred to in subparagraph (A).

"(2) 1.3 CENT RATE.—The rate of tax specified in paragraph (2) of subsection (c) shall be zero after September 30, 1990.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—(1) Section 221(b)(1)(A) of the Hazardous Substance Response Revenue Act of 1980, is amended by inserting "(attributable to the rate specified in paragraph (1) of subsection (c) of such section)" after "4611".

(2) Section 4661(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "(at the rate specified in paragraph (1) of subsection (c) of section 4611).".

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 520. (a) This section, section 501, section 502, section 512, section 522, and each provision of Subtitle A that authorizes the promulgation of regulations shall be effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) Subtitle D shall take effect on the first date on which both the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage and the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage are in force with respect to the United States.

(c) All other provisions of Subtitles A through D and the regulations issued thereunder, shall be effective on the one hundred and eightieth day after the date of enactment of this Act, except that the penalty prescribed by section 511 for failure to comply with the requirements of section 505 or the regulations issued thereunder shall not be effective until the ninetieth day after issuance of those regulations or the two hundred and seventieth day after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is earlier.

(d) Any regulation respecting financial responsibility, issued pursuant to any provision of law repealed by section 521 of this title, and in effect on the day immediately preceding the effective date of section 521 of this title shall remain in force until superseded by regulations issued under Subtitle A of this Act.

CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 521. (a) The first sentence of subsection (b) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act (43 U.S.C. 1653(b); 87 Stat. 586) is amended by inserting "in the State of Alaska" after "any area" and by inserting "related to the trans-Alaska oil pipeline" after "any activites". Such subsection is further amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "This subsection shall not apply to removal costs resulting from oil pollution as that term is defined in section 501(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(b)(1) Subsection (c) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act is repealed. All assets of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund, as of the effective date of this section, except for assets equal to the total amount of claims certified by the Secretary under paragraph (2) of this subsection, shall be rebated, subject to appropriations, directly to the operator of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline for payment on a pro rata basis to the owners of the oil at the time it was loaded on the vessel. The Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund under terms of subsection (c) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, and shall assume all liability incurred by the officers or trustees in the execution of their duties involving the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund, other than the liability of those officers or trustees for gross negligence or willful misconduct.

(2) The Secretary of the Interior shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the total amount of the claims outstanding against the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund not later than one hundred and eighty days after the effective date of this section. In the event that the total amount of the actual claims settled is less than the total amount of the outstanding claims certified, the difference between these amounts shall be rebated directly to the operator of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline for payment, on a pro rata basis, to the owners of the oil at the time it was loaded on the vessel.

(c) Section 17 of the Intervention on the High Seas Act (33 U.S.C. 1486; 88 Stat. 10) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. The fund established under subtitle B of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act shall be available to the Secretary for actions and activities relating to oil pollution (as defined in section 501(b) of that Act) taken under section 5 of this Act. The fund established under section 311(k) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act shall be available for actions and activities relating to other pollution taken under section 5 of this Act.".

(d) Section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (17) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following new paragraph:

"(18) 'person in charge' means the individual immediately responsible for the operation of a vessel or facility.".

(2) Paragraph (5) of subsection (b) is amended in the last sentence by inserting after "person" the following: "or his employer".

(3) Subparagraph (A) of paragraph (6) of subsection (b) is amended—

(A) in the first and second sentences, by striking out "or person in charge" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "person in charge, or employer of such person in charge"; and

(B) in the third sentence, by striking out "the owner or operator" and inserting in lieu thereof "whoever being".

(4) Subparagraph (B) of paragraph (6) of subsection (b) is amended in the first and second sentences by striking out "or person in charge" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "person in charge, or employer of such person in charge".

(5) Subsection (c)(2)(H) is amended by striking out "from the fund established under subsection (k) of this section for the reasonable costs incurred in such removal" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "for the reasonable costs incurred in such removal (i) from the fund established under section 513 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act in the case of any discharge from a vessel of petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom, or from a facility (as defined by subtitle A of such Act or (ii) from the fund established under subsection (k) of this section in any other case".

(6)(A) Subsection (d) is amended by inserting immediately before the last sentence the following: "Any expense incurred under this subsection or under the Intervention on the High Seas Act (or the convention defined in section 2(3) thereof) as the result of the discharge or imminent discharge from a vessel of petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom, shall be reimbursed from the fund established under section 513 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(B) Subsection (d) is further amended by striking out "Any" in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "Any other".

(7) Subsection (f)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the first place it appears and by striking out "carrying oil" and inserting in lieu thereof "carrying such oil".

(8) Subsection (f)(3) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined by section 501(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the first place it appears.

(9)(A) The first sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the second place it appears, by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 501(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the first place it appears.

(B) The second sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 501(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the second place it appears.

(C) The third sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "such" before "oil" the first place it appears and by striking out "carrying oil" and inserting in lieu thereof "carrying such oil".

(10)(A) Subsection (i)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 501(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the second place it appears.

(B) Subsection (i)(2) is repealed and paragraph (3) of subsection (i) (and all references thereto) is redesignated as paragraph (2).

(11) Subsection (p)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the first place it appears.

(e) The Deepwater Port Act of 1974 (33 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.; 88 Stat. 2126) is amended as follows:

(1) Section 4(c)(1) is amended by striking out "section 18(l) of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 505 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act".

(2) Subsections (b), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (l), and (n) of section 18 are repealed.

(3) Paragraph (3) of subsection (c) of section 18 is amended by striking out "Deepwater Port Liability Fund established pursuant to subsection (f) of this section." and inserting in lieu thereof "fund established under subtitle B of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(4) Subsection (k) of section 18 is amended to read as follows:

"(k) This section shall not be interpreted to preclude any State from imposing additional requirements, not inconsistent with the provisions of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act, for any discharge of oil from a deepwater port or a vessel within any safety zone.".

(5) Subsections (c), (k), and (m) of section 18 are redesignated as subsections (b), (c), and (d), respectively.

(f) Any amounts remaining in the Deepwater Port Liability Fund established by section 18(f) of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 shall, subject to appropriations, be deposited in the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund established by subtitle B of this Act. The Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Deepwater Port Liability Fund under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974.

(g) Title III of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978 (Public Law 95-372) is repealed. Any amounts remaining in the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund established under section 302 of that title, subject to appropriations, shall be deposited in the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund established by Subtitle B of this Act. The Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund under title III of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 522. If any provision of this Act or the applicability thereof is held invalid, the remainder of this Act shall not be affected thereby.

Subtitle D—Implementation of Conventions

RECOGNITION OF THE INTERNATIONAL FUND

SEC. 523. The International Oil Pollution Compensation Fund (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "International Fund") established by article 2 of the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "International Fund Convention") is recognized under the laws of the United States as a legal person and shall have the capacity under the laws of the United States to contract, to acquire and dispose of real and personal property, and to institute and be a party to legal proceedings. The Director of the International Fund is recognized as the legal representative of the International Fund. The Director shall be deemed to have appointed irrevocably the Secretary of State his agent for service of process in any action against the International Fund in any court in the United States.

SERVICE OF PROCESS AND INTERVENTION

SEC. 524. (a) In any action brought in a court in the United States against the owner of a ship or his guarantor under the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "Civil Liability Convention"), the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, shall serve a copy of the complaint and any subsequent pleading therein upon the International Fund and the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund at the same time the complaint or other pleading is served upon the opposing parties.

(b) The International Fund may intervene as a party as a matter of right in any action brought in a court in the United States against the owner of a ship or his guarantor under the Civil Liability Convention.

(c) If the International Fund has been served a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings in an action referred to in subsection (a) of this section, the International Fund shall be bound by any judgment entered therein, whether or not the International Fund was a party to the action.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION

SEC. 525. The International Fund and its assets shall be exempt from all direct taxation in the United States.

PAYMENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS

SEC. 526. The amount of any initial or annual contribution to the International Fund which is required to be made under article 10 of the International Fund Convention by any person with respect to oil received in any port, terminal installation, or other installation located in the United States shall be paid to the International Fund by the comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund. Before the International Fund Convention enters into force with respect to the United States, the President shall make, and deposit with the Secretary-General of the International Maritime Organization, a declaration under article 14 of the International Fund Convention that the United States assumes the obligation to pay contributions under article 10 of such Convention in respect of oil received within the territory of the United States and that such amount will be paid from the comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability-Trust Fund.

JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURTS

SEC. 527. (a) The United States district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of—

(1) all controversies arising in the territory, including the territorial sea, of the United States under the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund convention, and

(2) all controversies arising outside of the territory, including the territorial sea, of the United States under the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention, from an incident which causes damage in the territory of the United States, including the territorial sea, without regard to the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy.

(b) Venue shall lie in any district wherein the injury complained of occurred, or wherein the defendant resides, may be found, or has his principal office. For purposes of this subsection, the International Fund shall reside in the District of Columbia.

RECOGNITION OF JUDGMENTS

SEC. 528. Any final judgment of a court of any nation which is a party to the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention in an action for compensation under either such convention shall be recognized by any court of the United States or of a State when that judgment has become enforceable in such nation and is no longer subject to ordinary forms of review, except where—

(1) the judgment was obtained by fraud; or

(2) the defendant was not given reasonable notice and a fair opportunity to present his case.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

SEC. 529. (a) The owner of each ship which is documented under the laws of the United States and is carrying more than two thousand tons of oil in bulk as cargo shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility in amounts sufficient to cover the maximum liability of such owner for pollution damage arising from one incident under the Civil Liability Convention. The Secretary shall issue a certificate to each such owner who complies with this paragraph, in the form and manner required by the Civil Liability Convention.

(b) With respect to any ship owned by the United States, the Secretary shall issue a certificate stating that the ship is owned by the United States and that the ship's liability is covered within the limits of liability prescribed by the Civil Liability Convention.

(c) The owner of each ship (other than a ship to which subsection (a) or (b) applies), wherever registered, which is carrying more than two thousand tons of oil in bulk as cargo and which enters or leaves a port or offshore terminal in the United States (including the territorial seas) shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility in amounts sufficient to cover the maximum liability of such owner for pollution damage arising from one incident under the Civil Liability Convention. The owner of a ship which is registered in, or flying the flag of, a nation which is a party to the Civil Liability Convention shall be considered to have met the requirements of this paragraph if the ship is carrying a certificate issued by such nation attesting that insurance or other financial security is in force which meets the requirements of such Convention.

(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall withhold or revoke the clearance required by section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of any ship which does not have a certificate showing compliance with the requirements of financial responsibility under subsection (a) or (c) of this section.

(e) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may (1) deny entry to any facility, to any port or place in the United States, or to the navigable waters, or (2) detain at the facility or at the port or place in the United States, any vessel subject to this section that, upon request, does not produce the certificate required under this section or regulations issued hereunder.

(f) Any person who, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, is found to have failed to comply with the requirements of this section or the regulations issued under this section or with any denial or detention order shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty, not to exceed $10,000 for each violation. The amount of the civil penalty shall be assessed by the Secretary by written notice. In determining the amount of such penalty, the Secretary shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the prohibited acts committed and, with respect to the violator, the degree of cupability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require. The Secretary may compromise, modify, or remit with or without conditions any civil penalty which is subject to imposition or which has been imposed under this subsection. If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become final, the Secretary may refer the matter to the Attorney General for collection.

WAIVER OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY

SEC. 530. The United States waives all defenses based on its status as a sovereign State with respect to any controversy arising under the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention relating to any ship owned by the United States and used for commercial purposes.

DEFINITION OF FRANC

SEC. 531. Notwithstanding any provision of the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention to the contrary, one franc equals one-fifteenth of a special drawing right, as defined by the International Monetary Fund, for purposes of applying such conventions.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 532. The Secretary may issue such rules and regulations as are necessary to implement the Civil Liability Convention and the International Fund Convention.

"(j)(1) There shall be no liability under section 107 or 106 of this Act or section 202 of the Superfund Expansion and Protection Act of 1984 for any costs or damages referred to in paragraph (2) on the part of any person (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as the 'response action contractor') who enters into a contract or agreement with—

"(A) the Administrator;

"(B) a State; or

"(C) any responsible party to provide any evaluation, planning, engineering, design, construction, equipment, or any ancillary services thereto pursuant to a response action approved plan approved by the Administrator or by the State under this section. Nothing in this subsection shall affect the plaintiff's burden of establishing liability under section 107 or 106 of this Act or section 202 of the Superfund Expansion and Protection Act of 1984.

"(2) The exemption under paragraph (1) shall apply to all costs and damages resulting from a release of a hazardous substance or pollutant or contaminant from the facility concerned to the extent that such release—

"(A) occurred before the date on which the response action contractor commenced physical onsite response activity at such facility pursuant; or

"(B) occurred after such date but was caused by—

"(i) response action undertaken by the response action contractor in accordance with the specific requirements of a plan for response action (or any amendment thereto) which has been approved for such facility by the Administrator or by the State; or

"(ii) any person other than the response action contractor.

"(3)(A) Nothing in this subsection shall provide any exemption from liability under this Act or under the Superfund Expansion and Protection Act of 1984 for any person other than a response action contractor referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2).

"(B) Nothing in this subsection shall exempt any response action contractor from any such liability if the response action contractor would be a responsible party referred to in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) of section 107(a) of this Act or in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) of section 202(a) of the Superfund Expansion and Protection Act of 1984 even if the response action contractor had not entered into contract or agreement referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection and had not engaged in any response action at the facility concerned.".

IMPORTATION OF SOLID, INCLUDING HAZARDOUS WASTE

SEC. 119. Any State may impose any regulation (including any tax, fee or charge)—

(1) on the importation of solid waste (including hazardous waste) into that State for storage or disposal, or

(2) on the storage or disposal of such imported waste. Any such regulation may be different from a regulation imposed by a State on solid waste which is generated in that State and may discriminate in any manner against solid waste which is imported from any other State. As used in this section, the terms "solid waste" and "hazardous waste" have the same meaning as when such term is used in the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(2)(A) Whenever the Administrator determines that a sufficient number of persons responsible for a release or threatened release have been identified to effectuate an agreement under this subsection, the Administrator shall notify all such parties. The Administrator may only enter into an agreement under this subsection with respect to such release or threatened release within 120 days after providing such notice.

"(3) An agreement under this subsection shall require the parties to the agreement to carry out a plan for remedial action at the facility concerned with respect to (A) surface contamination, (B) subsurface contamination, or (C) long term operation and maintenance, or any combination of the foregoing.

"(4) Whenever any agreement under this subsection has been entered into for remedial action with respect to any item referred to in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of paragraph (3), the liability under this Act of each party to such an agreement for the costs or damages attributable to such item shall be limited to the share of such costs determined for such party under paragraph (5). Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to affect the liability of any person with respect to any costs or damages which are not subject to the agreement. Any person who is a party to the agreement shall not be liable to any other person who is not a party to the agreement on the basis of such other party's liability with respect to which the agreement was entered into.

"(5)(A) An agreement under this subsection shall provide that each party to the agreement (other than the Administrator) shall pay a share of the costs of the remedial action covered by the agreement. Such share shall be a share determined under the agreement on the basis of appropriate factors, including but not limited to the quantity and toxicity of hazardous substances, pollutants, and contaminants involved, the ability of the party to pay, and the difficulty of the remedial actions required. The total of the shares of all parties to the agreement shall equal or exceed 80 percent of the total costs of remedial action covered by the agreement, as determined by the Administrator. If any amount is paid to the Administrator under such agreement, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator shall retain such amount. Amounts retained by the Administrator under such agreement may be used by the Administrator only for purposes of carrying out the agreement.

"(B) Whenever an agreement has been entered into under this subsection, the Administrator shall pay from the Fund so much of the costs of remedial action covered by the agreement as is not paid by the parties to such agreement.

"(C) In any case in which an additional responsible party with respect to a release or threatened release is identified after an agreement has been entered into under this subsection concerning such release, the Administrator may enter into a separate agreement with such additional responsible party. On the basis of the amounts required to be paid by the additional responsible party, the Administrator shall redetermine the shares of each party to the original agreement, including the share of the Administrator.

"(6) If a person is notified under this subsection with respect to a release or threatened release of a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant, and

"(A) an agreement is or has been entered into under this subsection with respect to such release or threatened release,

"(B) such person does not become a party to an agreement under this subsection, and

"(C) such person is determined to be liable in an action under section 107 with respect to such release or threatened release, such person shall be liable to the United States for punitive damages in an amount at least equal to four times the amount of the judgment rendered against such person in the action brought by the United States under section 107. The Administrator may commence a civil action against any such person to recover such punitive damages. If any amount recovered under this paragraph exceeds the total costs of remedial action required with respect to the release or threatened release concerned, the Administrator may redetermine the shares of the parties to the agreement, including the Administrator and make corresponding refunds to such parties.

"(7) Whenever the Administrator enters into an agreement with any person or persons under this section, he shall bring an action in the appropriate United States district court against such person under section 107 and enter into a consent decree containing the agreement. If any party to an agreement under this subsection fails to comply with any requirements of the agreement, the Administrator may assess a civil penalty of not to exceed $25,000 for each day during which such failure continues against such party.

"(8) In any case in which no agreement has been reached under this subsection with respect to a release or threatened release within 120 days after notice has been issued under this subsection, the Administrator shall immediately publish a schedule under which the Administrator (or the State) shall carry out remedial action under section 104 with respect to such release or threatened release.".

Subtitle C—Administrative Recovery of Medical and Relocation Expenses

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 221. For purposes of this subtitle—

(1) The term "applicant" means any person who applies for compensation under this subtitle.

(2) The term "physical injury or illness" includes, but is not limited to, any physcial injury or illness which is caused by exposure to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant prior to birth. Such term does not include mental distress, fright, or emotional disturbance.

(3) The terms "treatment", "storage", and "disposal" have the same meaning as provided by section 1004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

APPLICATION FOR RELIEF

SEC. 222. Any individual who alleges that he has sustained injury for which relief is payable under this subtitle may file an application for such relief with the Administrator. Such application shall be in such form, and shall be filed in such manner, as the Administrator shall, by rule, provide. Such rule shall be issued within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this title.

AWARD OF RELIEF

SEC. 223. (a) If an individual establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that he has suffered a physical injury or illness which was caused by exposure to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant—

(1) from a facility or site at or from which such substance was stored, treated, recycled, disposed of, or migrated, or

(2) during transportation to such a facility or site,

the Administrator shall pay relief under this subtitle to such individual.

(b) If a dependent of any decreased individual establishes to the satisfaction of the Administrator that the death of such deceased individual was caused by any exposure referred to in subsection (a), the Administrator shall pay relief under this subtitle to such dependent.

AMOUNT OF RELIEF

SEC. 224. (a)(1) Relief under this subtitle to any individual who has suffered a physical injury or illness shall consist of—

(A) a payment or reimbursement for all medical costs incurred in connection with the physical injury, illness, or death concerned;

(B) a monthly payment in an amount equal to the injured, ill, or deceased individual's monthly earnings which are lost (as estimated by the Administrator) by reason of the physical injury, illness, or death during the one-year period following such injury, illness, or death; and

(C) reimbursement for—

(i) expenses incurred by an individual in obtaining alternative water supplies, or

(ii) reasonable costs of transportation, lodging, and meals for not more than three trips to locate a new residence, and reasonable moving costs, where such individual's exposure (or potential exposure) to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant caused or significantly contributed to such costs.

Payment under subparagraph (B) shall not exceed $1,000 per month.

(2) Relief under this subtitle to the dependents of any individual shall be equal to the amounts specified in paragraph (1), except that such relief shall include the reasonable expenses of burial. The Administrator shall promulgate rules regarding the equitable allocation of relief payable under this subtitle to dependents where there are two or more dependents.

(b) The Administrator shall compute the amount of relief to be awarded to any applicant under this subtitle and determine the method, terms, and time of payment.

(c)(1) Any payment made pursuant to this subtitle shall, for purposes of section 111(a) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, be considered a payment of governmental response costs incurred pursuant to section 104 of such Act and shall be charged against the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund established under subtitle B of title II of such Act. Claims against such fund which are in excess of the total amount available for purposes of this subtitle, as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), shall become valid and shall be paid in the same manner as provided in section 111(e)(1) of such Act.

(2) Not more than 12 per centum of the amount appropriated or credited to the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund for any fiscal year may be used for purposes of this subtitle.

(3) No payment shall be made pursuant to this subtitle except to the extent and in such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriations Acts.

PROCEDURE FOR DETERMINATION

SEC. 225. (a)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this subtitle, for purposes of making any determination respecting payment of a claim filed under this subtitle, the Administrator shall utilize the procedures used by the Secretary of Health and Human Services in determining entitlement to disability insurance benefit payments under section 223 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 432).

(2) The Administrator and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall enter into such contracts and other arrangements as may be necessary to use the personnal and office of the Social Security Administration for administration and determination of claims filed under this subtitle. The Administrator may, pursuant to such contracts or other arrangements, delegate to the Secretary, or to any employee of the Secretary, any function vested in the Administrator under this subtitle.

(b)(1) In determining any claim under this subtitle, if an individual (or his dependent) who is an applicant provides information sufficient to enable the Administrator to find that—

(A) the individual suffered any physical injury, illness, or death;

(B) the individual was exposed to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant—

(i) from a facility or site at or from which such substance was treated, recycled, stored, disposed, or migrated; or

(ii) during transportation to such facility or site; and

(C) exposure to such hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant was at such levels and for such duration as to be reasonably likely to cause or significantly contribute to death or to a physical injury or illness of the type suffered by the applicant, such injury, illness, or death shall be presumed to have been caused by such exposure.

(2) A presumption established as provided in paragraph (1) shall be overcome if the Administrator determines, on the basis of any information available to him, that it is reasonably certain that the exposure referred to in paragraph (1) did not cause, or significantly contribute to, the individual's physical injury, illness, or death.

(c) For purposes of making a determination respecting payment of any claim filed under this subtitle, any information which tends to establish that exposure to the hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant in question causes or contributes to death, or to physical injury or illness of the type or class allegedly suffered by an individual, shall be considered relevant to the issues of causation, including but not limited to the following:

(1) An increase in the incidence of such injury or illness, or an increase in the incidence of death, in the exposed population above that which is otherwise probable.

(2) Epidemiological studies.

(3) Animal studies.

(4) Tissue culture studies.

(5) Micro-organism culture studies.

(6) Laboratory and toxicologic studies.

(7) Immunological studies.

(8) Toxicology profiles prepared under section 104(i)(2) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980.

(9) Health effects studies prepared under section 104(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980.

(d) In making a determination under this subtitle, the administrator shall require such medical tests or examinations of the applicant as may be necessary to confirm the diagnosis or determination of physical injury or illness. The Administrator may also undertake such other investigations and require the production of such other information as he deems appropriate for purposes of making such determination.

(e)(1) If requested by the claimant, the Administrator shall conduct a hearing with respect to any claim which has been denied, in whole or in part. Such hearing shall be conducted in the same manner as hearings conducted with respect to disability insurance benefits under section 223 of the Social Security Act.

(2) In any proceeding under this subtitle, the owner or operator of any facility or site which is alleged to have been the source of the exposure on which a claim under this subtitle is based, or the person transporting any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant to such facility or site (in the case of a claim based on exposure during transportation), shall be notified of the proceeding, but shall have no right to participate in the proceeding.

(3) The Administrator shall award to each claimant who prevails in a proceeding under this subsection the costs of any representation by attorney or otherwise which is necessary for such claimant's participation in the proceeding and the cost of any expert witness fees incurred by such claimant.

SUBROGATION

SEC. 226. (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), whenever a payment is made under this subtitle to any applicant the United States shall be subrogated to the rights of such applicant under any other provision of law (including subtitle A of this title) for the full amount of such payment and shall be entitled to recover all administrative and adjudicative costs and attorneys fees incurred by the United States by reason of the applicant's claim.

(2) The United States shall not have any right of subrogation under paragraph (1) with respect to any payment under this subtitle for any physical injury or illness which was caused by exposure to a hazardous substance or pollutant or contaminant, if no part of such exposure occurred after the date which is 20 years before the date of enactment of this subtitle or if the defendant would not have been liable under applicable State law at the time of exposure.

(b) The Attorney General shall take such steps as may be necessary to protect or enforce any rights of subrogation under this section.

(c) Any amount recovered by the United States under this section shall be deposited in the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 227. (a) Any claimant adversely affected or aggrieved by any final determination of the Administrator under this subtitle may obtain a review of such determination in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, by filing a written petition within sixty days following the issuance of such final determination in a district court of the United States for the district within which—

(1) such person resides or conducts business; or

(2) the physical injury, illness, or death, or other expense which formed the basis for a claim relating to such final determination is alleged to have been caused.

(b) A determination made by the Administrator with respect to entitlement to benefits for injuries, illness, or death or other expense shall constitute a final administrative determination for the purpose of judicial review under this section.

ADDITIONAL RECOVERY

SEC. 228. (a) No individual who has recovered any amount under this subtitle with respect to exposure to any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant shall be prohibited from recovering an additional amount under this subtitle at a subsequent time if such individual establishes (in accordance with the procedures under this subtitle) that an additional physical injury or illness was caused by such exposure and that such additional physical injury or illness was not known to the individual at the time the prior application was made under this subtitle.

(b) Nothing in this subtitle shall preclude an individual or dependent who has recovered any amount under this subtitle with respect to exposure to any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant from recovering in an action in court for amounts in excess of any amount paid under this subtitle for a physical injury, illness, or death or for any damage not compensable under this subtitle.

COLLATERAL RECOVERY

SEC. 229. The amount payable under this subtitle to any applicant shall be reduced by the total of the compensation for costs for which relief may be paid under section 224(a) which is paid to the applicant by reason of the same physical injury or illness or death from any other source, inlcuding compensation (as described in section 224) paid—

(1) pursuant to any administrative or judicial proceeding under State law,

(2) pursuant to any consent decree under State law or any other binding settlement,

(3) under any governmental program (including medicaid or medicare) which the injured, ill, or deceased individual was required to participate in, or

(4) pursuant to any other insurance policy or program.

LIMITATIONS

SEC. 230. No application may be filed by an individual under this subtitle after the end of the six-year period beginning on the later of (1) the date the individual knew that he or she had sustained an injury for which relief is payable under this subtitle, or (2) the date of enactment of this subtitle. No application may be filed under this subtitle by a dependent of a deceased individual if such deceased individual would have been barred by the preceding sentence.

—At the end of the bill add the following:

TITLE VI—ADMINISTRATIVE RECOVERY OF MEDICAL AND RELOCATION EXPENSES

RECOVERY OF MEDICAL AND RELOCATION EXPENSES

SEC. 601. The Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE IV—MEDICAL AND RELOCATION EXPENSES

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 401. (a) For purposes of this title:

"(1) The term 'applicant' means any person who applies for compensation under this title.

"(2) The term 'medical costs' means the costs of all appropriate medical, surgical, hospital, nursing care, ambulance, and other related services, drugs, medicines, as appropriate for both diagnosis and treatment, and any rehabilitative programs within the scope of section 103 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 723);

"(3) The term 'physical injury or illness' includes, but is not limited to, any physical injury or illness which is caused by exposure to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant prior to birth. Such term does not include mental distress, fright, or emotional disturbance.

"(4) The term 'dependent' means with respect to any deceased person the individual or individuals referred to in section 8110 of title 5 of the United States Code.

"(5) The terms 'treatment', 'storage', and 'disposal' have the same meaning as provided by section 1004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(b) For purposes of this title, the terms 'hazardous substance', 'pollutant or contaminant', 'transport', and 'transportation' shall have the meanings provided in title I of this Act.

"APPLICATION FOR RELIEF

"SEC. 402. Any individual who alleges that he has sustained injury for which relief is payable under this title may file an application for such relief with the Administrator. Such application shall be in such form, and shall be filed in such manner, as the Administrator shall, by rule, provide. Such rule shall be issued within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this title.

"AWARD OF RELIEF

"SEC. 403. (a) If an individual establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that he has suffered a physical injury or illness which was caused by exposure to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant—

"(1) from a facility or site at or from which such substance was stored, treated, recycled, disposed of, or migrated, or

"(2) during transportation to such a facility or site,

the Administrator shall pay relief under this title to such individual.

"(b) If a dependent of any deceased individual establishes to the satisfaction of the Administrator that the death of such deceased individual was caused by any exposure referred to in subsection (a), the Administrator shall pay relief under this title to such dependent.

"AMOUNT OF RELIEF

"SEC. 404. (a)(1) Relief under this title to any individual who has suffered a physical injury or illness shall consist of—

"(A) a payment or reimbursement for all medical costs incurred in connection with the physical injury, illness, or death concerned;

"(B) a monthly payment in an amount equal to the injured, ill, or deceased individual's monthly earnings which are lost (as estimated by the Administrator) by reason of the physical injury, illness, or death during the one-year period following such injury, illness, or death; and

"(i) expenses incurred by an individual in obtaining alternative water supplies, or

"(ii) reasonable costs of transportation, lodging, and meals for not more than three trips to locate a new residence, and reasonable moving costs, where such individual's exposure (or potential exposure) to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant caused or significantly contributed to such costs.

Payment under subparagraph (B) shall not exceed $1,000 per month.

"(2) Relief under this title to the dependents of any individual shall be equal to the amounts specified in paragraph (1), except that such relief shall include the reasonable expenses of burial. The Administrator shall promulgate rules regarding the equitable allocation of relief payable under this title to dependents where there are two or more dependents.

"(b) The Administrator shall compute the amount of relief to be awarded to any applicant under this title and determine the method, terms, and time of payment.

"(c)(1) Any payment made pursuant to this title shall, for purposes of section 111(a) of this Act, be considered a payment of governmental response costs incurred pursuant to section 104 of this Act and shall be charged against the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund established under subtitle B of title II of this Act. Claims against such fund which are in excess of the total amount provided under paragraph (2) for purposes of this title shall become valid and shall be paid in the same manner as provided in section 111(e)(1) of this Act.

"(2) Not more than 12 per centum of the amount appropriated or credited to the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund for any fiscal year may be used for purposes of this title.

"(3) No payment shall be made pursuant to this title except to the extent and in such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriations Acts.

"PROCEDURE FOR DETERMINATION

"SEC. 405. (a)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this title, for purposes of making any determination respecting payment of a claim filed under this title, the Administrator shall utilize the procedures used by the Secretary of Health and Human Services in determining entitlement to disability insurance benefit payments under section 223 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 423).

"(2) The Administrator and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall enter into such contracts and other arrangements as may be necessary to use the personnel and office of the Social Security Administration for administration and determination of claims filed under this title. The Administrator may, pursuant to such contracts or other arrangements, delegate to the Secretary, or to any employee of the Secretary, any function vested in the Administrator under this title.

"(b)(1) In determining any claim under this title, if an individual (or his dependent) who is an applicant provides information sufficient to enable the Administrator to find that—

"(A) the individual suffered any physical injury, illness, or death;

"(B) the individual was exposed to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant—

"(i) from a facility or site at or from which such substance was treated, recycled, stored, disposed, or migrated; or

"(ii) during transportation to such facility or site; and

"(C) exposure to such hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant was at such levels and for such duration as to be reasonably likely to cause or significantly contribute to death or to a physical injury or illness of the type suffered by the applicant, such injury, illness, or death shall be presumed to have been caused by such exposure.

"(2) A presumption established as provided in paragraph (1) shall be overcome if the Administrator determines, on the basis of any information available to him, that it is reasonably certain that the exposure referred to in paragraph (1) did not cause, or significantly contribute to, the individual's physical injury, illness, or death.

"(c) For purposes of making a determination respecting payment of any claim filed under this title, any information which tends to establish that exposure to the hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant in question causes or contributes to death, or to physical injury or illness of the type or class allegedly suffered by an individual, shall be considered relevant to the issues of causation, including but not limited to the following:

"(6) Laboratory and toxicologic studies.

"(7) Immunological studies.

"(8) Toxicology profiles prepared under section 104(i)(2) of this Act.

"(9) Health effects studies prepared under section 104(l) of this Act.

"(d) In making a determination under this title, the Administrator shall require such medical tests or examinations of the applicant as may be necessary to confirm the diagnosis or determination of physical injury or illness. The Administrator may also undertake such other investigations and require the production of such other information as he deems appropriate for purposes of making such determination.

"(e)(1) If requested by the claimant, the Administrator shall conduct a hearing with respect to any claim which has been denied, in whole or in part. Such hearing shall be conducted in the same manner as hearings conducted with respect to disability insurance benefits under section 223 of the Social Security Act.

"(2) In any proceeding under this title, the owner or operator of any facility or site which is alleged to have been the source of the exposure on which a claim under this title is based, or the person transporting any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant to such facility or site (in the case of a claim based on exposure during transportation), shall be notified of the proceeding, but shall have no right to participate in the proceeding.

"(3) The Administrator shall award to each claimant who prevails in a proceeding under this subsection the costs of any representation by attorney or otherwise which is necessary for such claimant's participation in the proceeding and the cost of any expert witness fees incurred by such claimant.

"SUBROGATION

"SEC. 406. (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), whenever a payment is made under this title to any applicant the United States shall be subrogated to the rights of such applicant under any other provision of law (including title II of the Superfund Expansion and Protection Act of 1980) for the full amount of such payment and shall be entitled to recover all administrative and adjudicative costs and attorneys fees incurred by the United States by reason of the applicant's claim.

"(2) The United States shall not have any right of subrogation under paragraph (1) with respect to any payment under this title for any physical injury or illness which was caused by exposure to a hazardous substance or pollutant or contaminant, if no part of such exposure occurred after the date which is 20 years before the date of enactment of this title or if the defendent would not have been liable under applicable State law at the time of exposure.

"(b) The Attorney General shall take such steps as may be necessary to protect or enforce any rights of subrogation under this section.

"(c) Any amount recovered by the United States under this section shall be deposited in the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund.

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 407. (a) Any claimant adversely affected or aggrieved by any final determination of the Administrator under this title may obtain a review of such determination in accordance with the provisons of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, by filing a written petition within sixty days following the issuance of such final determination in a district court of the United States for the district within which—

"(1) such person resides or conducts business; or

"(2) the physical injury, illness, or death, or other expense which formed the basis for a claim relating to such final determination is alleged to have been caused.

"(b) A determination made by the Administrator with respect to entitlement to benefits for injuries, illness, or death or other expense shall constitute a final administrative determination for the purpose of judicial review under this section.

"ADDITIONAL RECOVERY

"SEC. 408. (a) No individual who has recovered any amount under this title with respect to exposure to any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant shall be prohibited from recovering an additional amount under this title at a subsequent time if such individual establishes (in accordance with the procedures under this title) that an additioal physical injury or illness was caused by such exposure and that such additional physical injury or illness was not known to the individual at the time the prior application was made under this title.

"(b) Nothing in this title shall preclude an individual or dependent who has recovered any amount under this title with respect to exposure to any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant from recovering in an action in court for amounts in excess of any amount paid under this title for a physical injury, illness, or death or for any damage not compensable under this title.

"COLLATERAL RECOVERY

"SEC. 409. The amount payable under this title to any applicant shall be reduced by the total of the compensation for costs for which relief may be paid under section 404(a) which is paid to the applicant by reason of the same physical injury or illness or death from any other source, including compensation (as described in section 404) paid—

"(1) pursuant to any administrative or judicial proceeding under State law,

"(2) pursuant to any consent decree under State law or any other binding settlement,

"(3) under any governmental program (including medicaid or medicare) which the injured, ill, or deceased individual was required to participate in, or

"(4) pursuant to any other insurance policy or program.

"LIMITATIONS

"SEC. 410. No application may be filed by an individual under this title after the end of the six-year period beginning on the later of (1) the date the individual knew that he or she had sustained an injury for which relief is payable under this title, or (2) the date of enactment of this title. No application may be filed under this title by a dependent of a deceased individual if such deceased individual would have been barred by the preceding sentence.".

(Amendment to committee print.)

(c) Section 104 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(m)(1) The Administrator, after providing notice under paragraph (2), may enter into an agreement under this subsection with one or more responsible persons for the purpose of providing for response to a release or substantial threat of release from a facility into the environment of a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act (including section 107), the liability under this Act of a party to such an agreement for any costs of response resulting from such release or threatened release shall be limited to the share of such costs set forth in such agreement for such party in accordance with paragraph (4)(A)(iii) (as such share may be redetermined under paragraph (4)(C)). Any person who is a party to an agreement entered into under this subsection shall not be liable to any other person who is not a party to this agreement on the basis of such other party's liability with respect to which the agreement was entered into.

"(2)(A) Whenever the Administrator determines that a sufficient number of responsible persons with respect to a release or threatened release have been identified to effectuate an agreement under this subsection, the Administrator shall notify all such parties. The Administrator may only enter into an agreement under this subsection with respect to such release or threatened release within 120 days after providing such notice. If the Administrator does not enter into such agreement within such 120-day period, the Administrator shall schedule response actions with respect to such release or threatened release and the liability of parties shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of this Act other than this subsection.

"(B) If a responsible party with respect to a release or threatened release is identified after notification under subparagraph (A) with respect to such release or threatened release, the Administrator shall notify such party.

"(C) A party notified under subparagraph (B) before an agreement is entered into under subparagraph (A) may enter into such agreement, or, if such agreement is entered into less than 30 days after such party is so notified, may become a party to such agreement not later than 30 days after receiving such notification.

"(D) A party notified under subparagraph (B) during the period an agreement is in effect under this subsection may become a party to such agreement not later than 30 days after receiving such notification.

"(E) A party notified under subparagraph (B) after the completion of response with respect to a release or threatened release and all operation and maintenance of any onsite remedial action to the satisfaction of the Administrator may enter into an agreement with the Administrator not later than 30 days after receiving such notification to pay the Administrator the amount determined under paragraph (4)(C).

"(3) An agreement under this subsection shall require the parties to the agreement to carry out a plan, after approval by the Administrator, for response action for all hazardous substances, pollutants, and contaminants on the surface and in the subsurface and groundwater at the facility involved, which response action meets the requirements of subsection (c)(4) and all other provisions of this Act. The Administrator shall only approve a plan under this paragraph after a reasonable opportunity for review and comment by the public. An agreement under this subsection shall continue in effect until the completion of response and all operation and maintenance of any onsite remedial action to the satisfaction of the Administrator.

"(4)(A)(i) An agreement under this subsection shall provide that the parties to the agreement (other than the Administrator) shall be liable for (I) 80 percent of the costs or response for the facility which is subject to such agreement, or (II) the percentage of such costs equal to the aggregate of the percentage of responsibilty determined by the Administrator for each such party under clause (ii), whichever is greater.

"(ii) For purposes of clause (i), the Administrator shall determine a percentage of responsibility for each potential party to an agreement under this subsection (other than the Administrator) based upon factors which shall include, but need not be limited to, the quantity and toxicity of hazardous substances, pollutants, and contaminants for which such potential party is responsible at the facility involved and the expense of response actions required with respect to such substances, pollutants, and contaminants.

"(iii) The parties to an agreement under this subsection (other than the Administrator) may agree on any division of their liability under clause (i) of this subparagraph. The agreement shall specify the share of each party so agreed upon.

"(B) Notwithstanding subsection (c)(3)(B) of this section, an agreement under this subsection shall provide that the Administrator shall pay from the Fund the share of the costs of response for which responsible parties are not liable under subparagraph (A).

"(C) In any case in which a responsible party becomes a party to an agreement under this subsection after such agreement is entered into, or enters into an agreement with the Administrator under paragraph (2)(E) with respect to the release or threatened release which was the subject of such agreement, the Administrator shall redetermine the shares determined under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of this paragraph as though such party and all other parties to the agreement were original parties to the agreement. Such party shall pay to the trustees of the trust account established under paragraph (5), or the Administrator in the case of an agreement under paragraph (2)(E), his share so determined of all amounts paid for response and for operation and maintenance under such payment to reimburse each of the other parties to the agreement (including the Administrator), or the Administrator shall use the amount of such payment to reimburse each such party and to reserve to the Administrator, such amounts as are necessary to reflect the shares as redetermined under this subparagraph. A responsible party who enters into an agreement under paragraph (2)(E) with respect to a release or threatened release which was the subject of an agreement under this subsection shall be considered a party to such agreement for purposes of any later redetermination of shares under this subparagraph or any reimbursement under paragraph (8).

"(D) An agreement under this subsection shall require the parties to the agreement (other than the Administrator) to pay all future and maintenance costs of any onsite remedial action.

"(5) An agreement under this subsection shall provide for the establishment of a trust account and the appointment of trustees to carry out such agreement. Each party to the agreement (including the Administrator) shall deposit into the trust account such party's share (as determined under paragraph (4) (A) or (B)) of the total estimated cost of carrying out response at the facility (as determined at the time of the agreement is entered into.) The trustees shall use amounts in the trust account to pay for the costs of response at the facility. The trustees may invest any amounts in the trust account which are not currently needed in interest-bearing obligations of the United States having maturities appropriate to the needs of the trust account. Interest on such obligations shall be credited to the trust account.

"(6)(A) If the costs of response at the facility subject to an agreement under this subsection exceed the amount in the trust account, the trustees shall make demand upon the parties to the agreement (including the Administrator) for payment of such additional amounts as may be necessary to pay for such costs. An agreement under this subsection shall require each such party to make additional payments to the trust account in proportion to the share of such party determined under paragraph (4), within 30 days of demand by the trustees. If any party (other than the Administrator) does not make an additional payment as required by the preceding sentence, such party, in addition to liability for such payment, may be liable to the United States for punitive damages of not to exceed four times the amount of such payment. The Administrator may commence a civil action against any such party to recover such punitive damages. Any amount recovered under this paragraph shall be paid to the trustees for deposit in the trust account.

"(B) If the amount in the trust account exceeds the amount needed for all of the costs of response at such facility, the amount of such excess shall be paid, upon completion of response actions to the satisfaction of the Administrator, to the parties to the agreement (including the Administrator) in proportion to the amounts paid into the trust account by each such party. Any amount paid to the Administrator under this subparagraph shall be deposited in the Fund.

"(7) Not later than 30 days after entering into an agreement under this subsection, each party to such agreement (including the Administrator) shall transmit to the trustees of the trust account, or permit the trustees to have access to, all records, reports, documents, and information in the possession of such party relating to the release or threatened release to which the agreement pertains. For purposes of subsection (e), the trustees shall be considered representatives of the President and the Administrator.

"(8) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, if—

"(A) a person is notified under paragraph (2)(B) with respect to a release or threat of release of a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant,

"(B) an agreement is or has been entered into under this subsection with respect to such release or threat,

"(C) such person does not become a party to such agreement under paragraph (2) (C) or (D) or enter into an agreement with the Administrator under paragraph (2)(E), as the case may be, and

"(D) such person is determined to be liable with respect to such release or threat, such person shall be jointly and severally liable for the amount contributed by the Administrator under such agreement, or the amount such person would have been required to pay under paragraph (4)(C) if such person had become a party to such agreement, whichever is greater. In addition such person may be liable to the United States for punitive damages of not to exceed four times the amount for which such person is liable under the preceding sentence. The Administrator may commence a civil action against any such person to recover such punitive damages. Any amount recovered by the Administrator under this paragraph shall be used to reimburse the parties to the agreement (including the Administrator) in proportion to their contributions to the trust account under paragraph (5). Any amounts recovered under this paragraph which exceed the total amount contributed to the trust account shall be deposited in the Fund.

"(9) If one or more parties to an agreement under this subsection fail to comply with any requirements of the agreement, the Administrator may, after providing 60 days notice, seek in the appropriate Federal district court to enforce the agreement or to recover any funds advanced or any costs incurred because of the failure to comply by such parties.

"(10) In any case in which subclause (I) of paragraph (4)(A)(i) applies in determining the liability of parties to an agreement under this subsection (other than the Administrator) with respect to a release or threatened release of any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant, any such party may bring an action in the appropriate United States district court to require any person not a party to such agreement who is alleged to be liable with respect to such release or threatened release to contribute to the payment of response costs paid by such party under such agreement.".

SUBTITLE C—ADMINISTRATIVE RECOVERY OF MEDICAL AND RELOCATION EXPENSES

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 221. For purposes of this subtitle—

(1) The term "applicant" means any person who applies for compensation under this subtitle.

(2) The term "physical injury or illness" includes, but is not limited to, any physical injury or illness which is caused by exposure to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant prior to birth. Such term does not include mental distress, fright, or emotional disturbance.

(3) The terms "treatment", "storage", and "disposal" have the same meaning as provided by section 1004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

APPLICATION FOR RELIEF

SEC. 222. Any individual who alleges that he has sustained injury for which relief is payable under this subtitle may file an application for such relief with the Administrator. Such application shall be in such form, and shall be filed in such manner, as the Administrator shall, by rule provide. Such rule shall be issued within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this title.

AWARD OF RELIEF

SEC. 223. (a) If an individual establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that he has suffered a physical injury or illness which was caused by exposure to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant—

(1) from a facility or site at or from which such substance was stored, treated, recycled, disposed of, or migrated, or

(2) during transportation to such a facility or site.

the Administrator shall pay relief under this subtitle to such individual.

(b) If a dependent of any deceased individual establishes to the satisfaction of the Administrator that the death of such deceased individual was caused by any exposure referred to in subsection (a), the Administrator shall pay relief under this subtitle to such dependent.

AMOUNT OF RELIEF

SEC. 224. (a)(1) Relief under this subtitle to any individual who has suffered a physical injury or illness shall consist of—

(A) a payment or reimbursement for all medical costs incurred in connection with the physical injury, illness, or death concerned;

(B) a monthly payment in an amount equal to the injured, ill, or deceased individual's monthly earnings which are lost (as estimated by the Administrator) by reason of the physical injury, illness, or death during the one-year period following such injury, illness, or death; and

(C) reimbursement for—

(i) expenses incurred by an individual in obtaining alternative water supplies, or

(ii) reasonable costs of transportation, lodging, and meals for not more than three trips to locate a new residence, and reasonable moving costs, where such individual's exposure (or potential exposure) to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant caused or significantly contributed to such costs.

payment under subparagraph (B) shall not exceed $1,000 per month.

(2) Relief under this subtitle to the dependents of any individual shall be equal to the amounts specified in paragraph (1), except that such relief shall include the reasonable expenses of burial. The Administrator shall promulgate rules regarding the equitable allocation of relief payable under this subtitle to dependents where there are two or more dependents.

(b) The Administrator shall compute the amount of relief to be awarded to any applicant under this subtitle and determine the method, terms, and time of payment.

(c)(1) Any payment made pursuant to this subtitle shall, for purposes of section 111(a) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, be considered a payment of governmental response costs incurred pursuant to section 104 of such Act and shall be charged against the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund established under subtitle B of title II of such Act. Claims against such fund which are in excess of the total amount available for purposes of this subtitle, as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), shall become valid and shall be paid in the same manner as provided in section 111(e)(1) of such Act.

(2) Not more than 12 per centum of the amount appropriated or credited to the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund for any fiscal year may be used for purposes of this subtitle.

(3) No payment shall be made pursuant to this subtitle except to the extent and in such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriations Act.

PROCEDURE FOR DETERMINATION

SEC. 225. (a)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this subtitle, for purposes of making any determination respecting payment of a claim filed under this subtitle, the Administrator shall utilize the procedures used by the Secretary of Health and Human Services in determining entitlement to disability insurance benefit payments under section 223 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 423).

(2) The Administrator and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall enter into such contracts and other arrangements as may be necessary to use the personnel and office of the Social Security Administration for administration and determination of claims filed under this subtitle. The Administrator may, pursuant to such contracts or other arrangements, delegate to the Secretary, or to any employee of the Secretary, any function vested in the Administrator under this subtitle.

(b)(1) In determining any claim under this subtitle, if an individual (or his dependent) who is an applicant provides information sufficient to enable the Administrator to find that—

(A) the individual suffered any physical injury, illness, or death;

(B) the individual was exposed to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant—

(i) from a facility or site at or from which such substance was treated, recycled, stored, disposed, or migrated; or

(ii) during transportation to such facility or site; and

(C) exposure to such hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant was at such levels and for such duration as to be reasonably likely to cause or significantly contribute to death or to a physical injury or illness of the type suffered by the applicant, such injury, illness, or death shall be presumed to have been caused by such exposure.

(2) A presumption established as provided in paragraph (1) shall be overcome if the Administrator determines, on the basis of any information available to him, that it is reasonably certain that the exposure referred to in paragraph (1) did not cause, or significantly contribute to, the individual's physical injury, illness, or death.

(c) For purposes of making a determination respecting payment of any claim filed under this subtitle, any information which tends to establish that exposure to the hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant in question causes or contributes to death, or to physical injury or illness of the type or class allegedly suffered by an individual, shall be considered relevant to the issues of causation, including but not limited to the following:

(1) An increase in the incidence of such injury or illness, or an increase in the incidence of death, in the exposed population above that which is otherwise probable.

(2) Epidemiological studies.

(3) Animal studies.

(4) Tissue culture studies.

(5) Micro-organism culture studies.

(6) Laboratory and toxicologic studies.

(7) Immunological studies.

(8) Toxicology profiles prepared under section 104(1)(2) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980.

(9) Health effects studies prepared under section 104(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980.

(d) In making a determination under this subtitle, the Administrator shall require such medical tests or examinations of the applicant as may be necessary to confirm the diagnosis or determination of physical injury or illness. The Administrator may also undertake such other investigations and require the production of such other information as he deems appropriate for purposes of making such determination.

(e)(1) If requested by the claimant, the Administrator shall conduct a hearing with respect to any claim which has been denied, in whole or in part. Such hearing shall be conducted in the same manner as hearings conducted with respect to disability insurance benefits under section 223 of the Social Security Act.

(2) In any proceeding under this subtitle, the owner or operator of any facility or site which is alleged to have been the source of the exposure on which a claim under this subtitle is based, or the person transporting any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant to such facility or site (in the case of a claim based on exposure during transportation), shall be notified of the proceeding, but shall have no right to participate in the proceeding.

(3) The Administrator shall award to each claimant who prevails in a proceeding under this subsection the costs of any representation by attorney or otherwise which is necessary for such claimant's participation in the proceeding and the cost of any expert witness fees incurred by such claimant.

SUBROGATION

SEC. 226. (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), whenever a payment is made under this subtitle to any applicant the United States shall be subrogated to the rights of such applicant under any other provision of law (including subtitle A of this title) for the full amount of such payment and shall be entitled to recover all administrative and adjudicative costs and attorneys fees incurred by the United States by reason of the applicant's claim.

(2) The United States shall not have any right of subrogation under paragraph (1) with respect to any payment under this subtitle for any physical injury or illness which was caused by exposure to a hazardous substance or pollutant or contaminant, if no part of such exposure occurred after the date which is 20 years before the date of enactment of this subtitle or if the defendant would not have been liable under applicable State law at the time of exposure.

(b) The Attorney General shall take such steps as may be necessary to protect or enforce any rights of subrogation under this section.

(c) Any amount recovered by the United States under this section shall be deposited in the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 227. (a) Any claimant adversely affected or aggrieved by any final determination of the Administrator under this subtitle may obtain a review of such determination in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, by filing a written petition within sixty days following the issuance of such final determination in a district court of the United States for the district within which—

(1) such person resides or conducts business; or

(2) the physical injury, illness, or death, or other expense which formed the basis for a claim relating to such final determination is alleged to have been caused.

(b) A determination made by the Administrator with respect to entitlement to benefits for injuries, illness, or death or other expense shall constitute a final administrative determination for the purpsoe of judicial review under this section.

ADDITIONAL RECOVERY

SEC. 228. (a) No individual who has recovered any amount under this subtitle with respect to exposure to any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant shall be prohibited from recovering an additional amount under this subtitle at a subsequent time if such individual establishes (in accordance with the procedures under this subtitle) that an additional physical injury or illness was caused by such exposure and that such additional physical injury or illness was not known to the individual at the time the prior application was made under this subtitle.

(b) Nothing in this subtitle shall preclude an individual or dependent who has recovered any amount under this subtitle with respect to exposure to any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant from recovering in an action in court for amounts in excess of any amount paid under this subtitle for a physical injury, illness, or death or for any damage not compensable under this subtitle.

COLLATERAL RECOVERY

SEC. 229. The amount payable under this subtitle to any applicant shall be reduced by the total of the compensation for costs for which relief may be paid under section 224(a) which is paid to the applicant by reason of the same physical injury or illness or death from any other source, including compensation (as described in section 224) paid—

(1) pursuant to any administrative or judicial proceeding under State law,

(2) pursuant to any consent decree under State law or any other binding settlement,

(3) under any governmental program (including medicaid or medicare) which the injured, ill, or deceased individual was required to participate in, or

(4) pursuant to any other insurance policy or program.

LIMITATIONS

SEC. 230. No application may be filed by an individual under this subtitle after the end of the six-year period beginning on the later of (1) the date the claimant knew of the injury's causal association with the hazardous substance for which relief is payable under this subtitle, or (2) the date of enactment of this subtitle. No application may be filed under this subtitle by a dependent of a deceased individual if such deceased individual would ahve been barred by the preceding sentence.

TITLE VI—ADMINISTRATIVE RECOVERY OF MEDICAL AND RELOCATION EXPENSES

RECOVERY OF MEDICAL AND RELOCATION EXPENSES

SEC. 601. The Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE IV—MEDICAL AND RELOCATION EXPENSES

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 401. (a) For purposes of this title:

"(1) The term 'applicant' means any person who applies for compensation under this title.

"(2) The term 'medical costs' means the costs of all appropriate medical, surgical, hospital, nursing care, ambulance, and other related services, drugs, medicines, as appropriate for both diagnosis and treatment, and any rehabilitative programs within the scope of section 103 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 723);

"(3) The term 'physical injury or illness' includes, but is not limited to, any physical injury or illness which is caused by exposure to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant prior to birth. Such term does not include mental distress, fright, or emotional disturbance.

"(4) The term 'dependent' means with respect to any deceased person the individual or individuals referred to in section 8110 of title 5 of the United States Code.

"(5) The terms 'treatment', 'storage', and 'disposal' have the same meaning as provided by section 1004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(b) For purposes of this title, the terms 'hazardous substance', 'pollutant or contaminant', 'transport', and 'transportation' shall have the meanings provided in title I of this act.

"APPLICATION FOR RELIEF

"SEC. 402. Any individual who alleges that he has sustained injury for which relief is payable under this title may file an application for such relief with the Administrator. Such application shall be in such form, and shall be filed in such manner, as the Administrator shall, by rule provide. Such rule shall be issued within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this title.

"AWARD OF RELIEF

"SEC. 403. (a) If an individual establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that he has suffered a physical injury or illness which was caused by exposure to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant—

"(1) from a facility or site at or from which such substance was stored, treated, recycled, disposed of, or migrated, or

"(2) during transportation to such a facility or site,

the Administrator shall pay relief under this title to such individual.

"(b) If a dependent of any deceased individual establishes to the satisfaction of the Administrator that the death of such deceased individual was caused by any exposure referred to in subsection (a), the Administrator shall pay relief under this title to such dependent.

"AMOUNT OF RELIEF

"SEC. 404. (a)(1) Relief under this title to any individual who has suffered a physical injury or illness shall consist of—

"(A) a payment or reimbursement for all medical costs incurred in connection with the physical injury, illness, or death concerned;

"(B) a monthly payment in an amount equal to the injured, ill, or deceased individual's monthly earnings which are lost (as estimated by the Administrator) by reason of the physical injury, illness, or death during the one-year period following such injury, illness, or death; and

"(i) expenses incurred by an individual in obtaining alternative water supplies, or

"(ii) reasonable costs of transportation, lodging, and meals for not more than three trips to locate a new residence, and reasonable moving costs, where such individual's exposure (or potential exposure) to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant caused or significantly contributed to such costs.

Payment under subparagraph (B) shall not exceed $1,000 per month.

"(2) Relief under this title to the dependents of any individual shall be equal to the amounts specified in paragraph (1), except that such relief shall include the reasonable expenses of burial. The Administrator shall promulgate rules regarding the equitable allocation of relief payable under this title to dependents where there are two or more dependents.

"(b) The Administrator shall compute the amount of relief to be awarded to any applicant under this title and determine the method, terms, and time of payment.

"(c)(1) Any payment made pursuant to this title shall, for purposes of section 111(a) of this Act, be considered a payment of governmental response costs incurred pursuant to section 104 of this Act and shall be charged against the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund established under subtitle B of title II of this Act. Claims against such fund which are in excess of the total amount provided under paragraph (2) for purposes of this title shall become valid and shall be paid in the same manner as provided in section 111(e)(1) of this Act.

"(2) Not more than 12 per centum of the amount appropriated or credited to the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund for any fiscal year may be used for purposes of this title.

"(3) No payment shall be made pursuant to this title except to the extent and in such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriations Act.

"PROCEDURE FOR DETERMINATION

"SEC. 405. (a)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this title, for purposes of making any determination respecting payment of a claim filed under this title, the Administrator shall utilize the procedures used by the Secretary of Health and Human Services in determining entitlement to disability insurance benefit payments under section 223 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 423).

"(2) The Administrator and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall enter into such contracts and other arrangements as may be necessary to use the personnel and office of the Social Security Administration for administration and determination of claims filed under this title. The Administrator may, pursuant to such contracts or other arrangements, delegate to the Secretary, or to any employee of the Secretary, any function vested in the Administrator under this title.

"(b)(1) In determining any claim under this title, if an individual (or his dependent) who is an applicant provides information sufficient to enable the Administrator to find that—

"(A) the individual suffered any physical injury, illness, or death;

"(B) the individual was exposed to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant—

"(i) from a facility or site at or from which such substance was treated, recycled, stored, disposed, or migrated; or

"(ii) during transportation to such facility or site; and

"(C) exposure to such hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant was at such levels and for such duration as to the reasonably likely to cause or significantly contribute to death or to a physical injury or illness of the type suffered by the applicant, such injury, illness, or death shall be presumed to have been caused by such exposure.

"(2) A presumption established as provided in paragraph (1) shall be overcome if the Administrator determines, on the basis of any information available to him, that it is reasonably certain that the exposure referred to in paragraph (1) did not cause, or significantly contribute to, the individual's physical injury, illness, or death.

"(8) Toxicology profiles prepared under section 104(i)(2) of this Act.

"(9) Health effects studies prepared under section 104(1) of this Act.

"(d) In making a determination under this title, the Administrator shall require such medical tests or examinations of the applicant as may be necessary to confirm the diagnosis or determination of physical injury or illness. The Administrator may also undertake such other investigations and require the production of such other information as he deems appropriate for purposes of making such determination.

"(e)(1) If requested by the claimant, the Administrator shall conduct a hearing with respect to any claim which has been denied, in whole or in part. Such hearing shall be conducted in the same manner as hearings conducted with respect to disability insurance benefits under section 223 of the Social Security Act.

"(2) In any proceeding under this title, the owner or operator of any facility or site which is alleged to have been the source of the exposure on which a claim under this title is based, or the person transporting any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant to such facility or site (in the case of a claim based on exposure during transportation), shall be notified of the proceeding, but shall have no right to participate in the proceeding.

"(3) The Administrator shall award to each claimant who prevails in a proceeding under this subsection the costs of any representation by attorney or otherwise which is necessary for such claimant's participation in the proceeding and the cost of any expert witness fees incurred by such claimant.

"SUBROGATION

"SEC. 406. (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), whenever a payment is made under this title to any applicant the United States shall be subrogated to the rights of such applicant under any other provision of law (including title II of the Superfund Expansion and Protection Act of 1980) for the full amount of such payment and shall be entitled to recover all administrative and adjudicative costs and attorneys fees incurred by the United States by reason of the applicant's claim.

"(2) The United States shall not have any right of subrogation under paragraph (1) with respect to any payment under this title for any physical injury or illness which was caused by exposure to a hazardous substance or pollutant or contaminant, if no part of such exposure occurred after the date which is 20 years before the date of enactment of this title or if the defendant would not have been liable under applicable State law at the time of exposure.

"(b) The Attorney General shall take such steps as may be necessary to protect or enforce any rights of subrogation under this section.

"(c) Any amount recovered by the United States under this section shall be deposited in the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund.

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 407. (a) Any claimant adversely affected or aggrieved by any final determination of the Administrator under this title may obtain a review of such determination in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, by filing a written petition within sixty days following the issuance of such final determination in a district court of the United States for the district within which—

"(1) such person resides or conducts business; or

"(2) the physical injury, illness, or death, or other expense which formed the basis for a claim relating to such final determination is alleged to have been caused.

"(b) A determination made by the Administrator with respect to entitlement to benefits for injuries, illness, or death or other expense shall constitute a final administrative determination for the purpose of judicial review under this section.

"ADDITIONAL RECOVERY

"SEC. 408. (a) No individual who has recovered any amount under this title with respect to exposure to any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant shall be prohibited from recovering an additional amount under this title at a subsequent time if such individual establishes (in accordance with the procedures under this title) that an additional physical injury or illness was caused by such exposure and that such additional physical injury or illness was not known to the individual at the time the prior application was made under this title.

"(b) Nothing in this title shall preclude an individual or dependent who has recovered any amount under this title with respect to exposure to any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant from recovering in an action in court for amounts in excess of any amount paid under this title for a physical injury, illness, or death or for any damage not compensable under this title.

"COLLATERAL RECOVERY

"SEC. 409. The amount payable under this title to any applicant shall be reduced by the total of the compensation for costs for which relief may be paid under section 404(a) which is paid to the applicant by reason of the same physical injury or illness or death from any other source, including compensation (as described in section 404) paid—

"(1) pursuant to any administration or judicial proceeding under State law,

"(2) pursuant to any consent decree under State law or any other binding settlement,

"(3) under any governmental program (including medicaid or medicare) which the injured, ill, or deceased individual was required to participate in, or

"(4) pursuant to any other insurance policy or program.

"LIMITATIONS

"SEC. 410. No application may be filed by an individual under this title after the end of the six-year period beginning on the later of (1) the date the claimant knew of the injury's causal association with the hazardous substance for which relief is payable under this title, or (2) the date of enactment of this title. No application may be filed under this title by a dependent of a deceased individual if such deceased individual would have been barred by the preceding sentence.".

Subtitle C—Administrative Recovery of Medical and Relocation Expenses

"DEFINITIONS

SEC. 221. (a) For purposes of this subtitle:
(1) The term "applicant" means any person who applies for compensation under this subtitle.
(2) The term "medical costs" means the costs of all appropriate medical, surgical, hospital, nusing care, ambulance, and other related services, drugs, medicines, as appropriate for both diagnosis and treatment, and any rehabilitative programs within the scope of section 103 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 723).
(3) The term "physical injury or illness" includes, but is not limited to, any physical injury or illness which is caused by exposure to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant prior to birth. Such term does not include mental distress, fright, or emotional disturbance.
(4) The term "dependent" means with respect to any deceased person the individual or individuals referred to in section 8110 of title 5 of the United States Code.
(5) The terms "treatment", "storage", and "disposal" have the same meaning as provided by section 1004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.
"(b) For purposes of this subtitle, the terms "hazardous substance", "pollutant or contaminant", "transport", and "transportation" shall have the meanings provided in title I of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980.

APPLICATION FOR RELIEF

SEC. 222. Any individual who alleges that he has sustained injury for which relief is payable under this subtitle may file an application for such relief with the Administrator. Such application shall be in such form, and shall be filed in such manner, as the Administrator shall, by rule or order, provide. Such rule or order shall be issued within forty-five days after the date of the enactment of this subtitle.

AWARD OF RELIEF

SEC. 223. (a) If an individual establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that he has suffered a physical injury or illness which was caused by exposure to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant—
(1) from a facility or site at or from which such substance was stored, treated, recycled, disposed of, or migrated, or
(2) during transportation of such a facility or site,
the Administrator shall pay relief under this subtitle to such individual, subject to advance appropriations and subject to the availability of adequate funds as provided in section 224.
(b) If a dependent of any deceased individual establishes to the satisfaction of the Administrator that the death of such deceased individual was caused by any exposure referred to in subsection (a), the Administrator shall pay relief under this subtitle to such dependent, subject to advance appropriations and subject to the availability of adequate funds as provided in section 224.

AMOUNT OF RELIEF

SEC. 224. (a)(1) Relief under this subtitle to any individual who has suffered a physical injury or illness shall consist of—
(A) a payment of reimbursement for all medical costs incurred in connection with the physical injury, illness, or death concerned;
(B) a monthly payment in an amount equal to the injured, ill, or deceased individual's monthly earnings which are lost (as estimated by the Administrator) by reason of the physical injury, illness, or death during the three-year period following such injury, illness, or death; and
(C) reimbursement for—
(i) expenses incurred by an individual in obtaining alternative water supplies, or
(ii) reasonable costs of transportation, lodging, and meals for not more than three trips to locate a new residence, and reasonable moving costs, where such individual's exposure (or potential exposure) to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant caused or significantly contributed to such costs.

Payment under subparagraph (B) shall not exceed $2,000 per month.
(2) Relief under this subtitle to the dependents of any individual shall be equal to the amounts specified in paragraph (1), except that such relief shall include the reasonable expenses of burial. The Administrator shall promulgate rules regarding the equitable allocation of relief payable under this subtitle to dependents where there are two or more dependents.
(b) The Administrator shall compute the amount of relief to be awarded to any applicant under this subtitle and determine the method, terms, and time of payment.
(c)(1) Payments authorized to be made pursuant to this subtitle may be made only from amounts appropriated after the fiscal year 1985 to the Hazardous Substance Superfund established under section 9505 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. To the extent that payments authorized to be made under this subtitle exceed the total amount available for such purposes as provided in paragraph (2), such payments shall be made in the same manner as provided in section 111(e)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980.
(2) Not more than 12 per centum of the amount credited to the Hazardous Substance Superfund for any fiscal year may be used for purposes of this subtitle.
(d) Section 111(a)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by inserting the following at the end thereof: "and for payment of relief described in subtitle B of title II of the Superfund Expansion and Protection Act of 1984 (subject to the limitations set forth in section 224(c) of such Act).".

PROCEDURE FOR DETERMINATION

SEC. 225. (a)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this subtitle, for purposes of making any determination respecting payment of a claim filed under this subtitle, the Administrator shall utilize the procedures used by the Secretary of Health and Human Services in determining entitlement to disability insurance benefit payments under section 223 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 423).
(2) The Administrator and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall enter into such contracts and other arrangements as may be necessary to use the personnel and office of the Social Security Administration for administration and determination of claims filed under this subtitle. The Administrator may, pursuant to such contracts or other arrangements, delegate to the Secretary, or to any employee of the Secretary, any function vested in the Administrator under this subtitle.
(b)(1) In determining any claim under this subtitle, if an individual (or his dependent) who is an applicant provides information sufficient to enable the Administrator to find that—
(A) the individual suffered any physical injury, illness, or death;
(B) the individual was exposed to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant—
(i) from a facility or site at or from which such substance was treated, recycled, stored, disposed, or migrated; or
(ii) during transportation to such facility or site; and
(C) exposure to such hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant was at such levels and for such duration as to be reasonably likely to cause or significantly contribute to death or to a physical injury or illness of the type suffered by the applicant.

such injury, illness, or death shall be presumed to have been caused by such exposure.
(2) A presumption established as provided in paragraph (1) shall be overcome if the Administrator determines, on the basis of any information available to him, that it is reasonably certain that the exposure referred to in paragraph (1) did not cause, or significantly contribute to, the individual's physical injury, illness, or death.
(c) For purposes of making a determination respecting payment of any claim filed under this subtitle, any information which tends to establish that exposure to the hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant in question causes or contributes to death, or to physical injury or illness of the type or class allegedly suffered by an individual, shall be considered relevant to the issues of causation, including but not limited to the following:
(1) An increase in the incidence of such injury or illness, or an increase in the incidence of death, in the exposed population above that which is otherwise probable.
(2) Epidemiological studies.
(3) Animal studies.
(4) Tissue culture studies.
(5) Micro-organism culture studies.
(6) Laboratory and toxicologic studies.
(7) Immunological studies.
(8) Toxicology profiles prepared under section 104(i)(2) of this Act.
(9) Health effects studies prepared under section 104(1) of this Act.
(d) In making a determination under this subtitle, the Administrator shall require such medical tests or examinations of the applicant as may be necessary to confirm the diagnosis or determination of physical injury or illness. The Administrator may also undertake such other investigations and require the production of such other information as he deems appropriate for purposes of making such determination.
(e)(1) If requested by the claimant, the Administrator shall conduct a hearing with respect to any claim which has been denied, in whole or in part. Such hearing shall be conducted in the same manner as hearings conducted with respect to disability insurance benefits under section 223 of the Social Security Act.

(2) In any proceeding under this subtitle, the owner or operator of any facility or site which is alleged to have been the source of the exposure on which a claim under this subtitle is based, or the person transporting any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant to such facility or site (in the case of a claim based on exposure during transportation), shall be notified of the proceeding, but shall have no right to participate in the proceeding.

(3) The Administrator shall award to each claimant who prevails in a proceeding under this subsection the costs of any representation by attorney or otherwise which is necessary for such claimant's participation in the proceeding and the cost of any expert witness fees incurred by such claimant.

SUBROGATION

SEC. 226. (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), whenever a payment is made under this subtitle to any applicant the United States shall be subrogated to the rights of such applicant under any other provision of law (including title II of the Superfund Expansion and Protection Act of 1980) for the full amount of such payment and shall be entitled to recover all administrative and adjudicative costs and attorneys fees incurred by the United States by reason of the applicant's claim.

(2) The United States shall not have any right of subrogation under paragraph (1) with respect to any payment under this subtitle for any physical injury or illness which was caused by exposure to a hazardous substance or pollutant or contaminant, if no part of such exposure occurred after the date which is 20 years before the date of enactment of this subtitle.

(b) The Attorney General shall take such steps as may be necessary to protect or enforce any rights of subrogation under this section.

(c) Any amount recovered by the United States under this section shall be deposited in the Hazardous Substance Response Trust fund.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 227. (a) Any person adversely affected or aggrieved by any final determination of the Administrator under this subtitle may obtain a review of such determination in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, by filing a written petition within sixty days following the issuance of such final determination in a district court of the United States for the district within which—

(1) such person resides or conducts business; or

(2) the physical injury, illness, or death, or other expense which formed the basis for a claim relating to such final determination is alleged to have been caused.

(b) A determination made by the Administrator with respect to entitlement to benefits for injuries, illness, or death or other expense shall constitute a final administrative determination for the purpose of judicial review under this section.

ADDITIONAL RECOVERY

SEC. 228. (a) No individual who has recovered any amount under this subtitle with respect to exposure to any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant shall be prohibited from recovering an additional amount under this subtitle at a subsequent time if such individual establishes (in accordance with the procedures under this subtitle) that an additional physical injury or illness was caused by such exposure and that such additional physical injury or illness was not known to the individual at the time the prior application was made under this subtitle.

(b) Nothing in this subtitle shall preclude an individual or dependent who has recovered any amount under this subtitle with respect to exposure to any hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant from recovering in an action in court for amounts in excess of any amount paid under this subtitle for a physical injury, illness, or death or for any damage not compensable under this subtitle.

COLLATERAL RECOVERY

SEC. 229. The amount payable under this subtitle to any applicant shall be reduced by the total of the compensation for costs for which relief may be paid under section 224(a) which is paid to the applicant by reason of the same physical injury or illness or death from any other source, including compensation (as described in section 224) paid—

(1) pursuant to any administrative or judicial proceeding under State law,

(2) pursuant to any consent decree under State law or any other binding settlement,

(3) under any governmental program (including medicaid or medicare) which the injured, ill, or deceased individual was required to participate in, or

(4) pursuant to any other insurance policy or program.

"(b) For purposes of this subtitle, the terms "hazardous substance", "pollutant or contaminant", "transport", and "transportation" shall have the meanings provided in title I of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980.

APPLICATION FOR RELIEF

SEC. 602. Any individual who alleges that he has sustained injury for which relief is payable under this subtitle may file an application for such relief with the Administrator. Such application shall be in such form, and shall be filed in such manner, as the Administrator shall, by rule or order, provide. Such rule or order shall be issued within forty-five days after the date of the enactment of this subtitle.

AWARD OF RELIEF

SEC. 603. (a) If an individual establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that he has suffered a physical injury or illness which was caused by exposure to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant—

(1) from a facility or site at or from which such substance was stored, treated, recycled, disposed of, or migrated, or

(2) during transportation to such a facility or site,

the Administrator shall pay relief under this subtitle to such individual, subject to advance appropriations and subject to the availability of adequate funds as provided in section 224.

(b) If a dependent of any deceased individual establishes to the satisfaction of the Administrator that the death of such deceased individual was caused by any exposure referred to in subsection (a), the Administrator shall pay relief under this subtitle to such dependent, subject to advance appropriations and subject to the availability of adequate funds as provided in section 224.

AMOUNT OF RELIEF

SEC. 604. (a)(1) Relief under this subtitle to any individual who has suffered a physical injury or illness shall consist of—

(A) a payment or reimbursement for all medical costs incurred in connection with the physical injury, illness, or death concerned;

(B) a monthly payment in an amount equal to the injured, ill, or deceased individual's monthly earnings which are lost (as estimated by the Administrator) by reason of the physical injury, illness, or death during the three-year period following such injury, illness, or death; and

(C) reimbursement for—

(i) expenses incurred by an individual in obtaining alternative water supplies, or

(ii) reasonable costs of transportation, lodging, and meals for not more than three trips to locate a new residence, and reasonable moving costs, where such individual's exposure (or potential exposure) to a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant caused or significantly contributed to such costs.

Payment under subparagraph (B) shall not exceed $2,000 per month.

(2) Relief under this subtitle to the dependents of any individual shall be equal to the amounts specified in paragraph (1), except that such relief shall include the reasonable expenses of burial. The Administrator shall promulgate rules regarding the equitable allocation of relief payable under this subtitle to dependents where there are two or more dependents.

(b) Section 104(i) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3) For each fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1985, not less than $30,000,000 of the amounts appropriated from the Fund for such fiscal year for carrying out this Act shall be made available to the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry for the purpose of carrying out this subsection. For each such fiscal year, such additional sums as may be necessary to enable such agency to carry out other responsibilities under this Act are authorized to be made available to such agency from amounts so appropriated.

"(4) The President shall provide for the employment of an adequate number of officers and employees in the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry, based upon the amount made available to such agency under paragraph (3) for each fiscal year and taking into account the recommendations of such agency.".

NOTICE BY FEDERAL AGENCIES

SEC. 303. Section 107(g) is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(g)" and by adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof:

"(2)(A) After the effective date of regulations under this paragraph, whenever any agency or instrumentality of the United States enters into any contract for the sale of real property which is owned by the United States and on which any Federally regulated hazardous waste was disposed of or stored for one year or more, the head of such agency or instrumentality shall include in such contract notice of the type and quantity of such hazardous waste and notice of the time at which such storage, or disposal took place. Such notice shall be provided in such form and manner as may be provided in regulations promulgated by the Administrator. As promptly as practicable after the date of the enactment of this paragraph, and after consultation with the Administrator of the General Services Administration, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations regarding the notice required to be provided under this section.

"(B) In the case of any real property owned by the United States on which any hazardous waste was stored for one year or more or disposed of, each deed entered into for the transfer of such property by the United States to any other person or entity shall contain a convenant warranting that all remedial action necessary to protect human health and the environment with respect to any such waste remaining on the property has been taken prior to the date of such transfer.

"(C) As used in this paragraph, the term 'Federally regulated hazardous waste' means any hazardous waste (within the meaning of section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act) which is—

"(i) listed or identified under section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act; and

"(ii) required to be treated, stored, or disposed of in a facility which is operating pursuant to a permit issued under section 3005 of such Act (or pursuant to interim status under section 3005(e) of such Act).".

FEDERAL FACILITIES

SEC. 119. The following section is inserted immediately after section 117:

"FEDERAL FACILITIES

"SEC. 116. (a)(1) Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this section, each department, agency, and instrumentality of the United States shall transmit to the Administrator a notice regarding each facility at which any hazardous substance has been treated, stored pending disposal, or disposed of and which, as of the date of the enactment of this section, is owned or operated by the department, agency or instrumentality.

"(2) In each year after the date of the enactment of this section, each such department, agency, or instrumentality shall submit such a notice regarding each such facility which is owned or operated by the department, agency, or instrumentality at any time after the date of the enactment of this section and which was not the subject of a notice transmitted under paragraph (1).

"(b) The notice under subsection (a) shall contain the following information, to the extent available—

"(1) The location of each facility and where any hazardous substance has been disposed of, a description of hydrogeology of the facility and the location of withdrawal wells and surface water within one mile of the facility.

"(2) Such information relating to the amount, nature, and toxicity of the hazardous substance in each facility as may be necessary to determine the extent of any health hazard which may be associated with any facility.

"(3) Information on the known nature and extent of environmental contamination at each facility, including a description of the monitoring data obtained.

"(4) A list of facilities at which any hazardous substance has been disposed of and environmental monitoring data has not been obtained, and the reasons for the lack of monitoring data at each facility.

"(5) A description of response actions undertaken or contemplated at contaminated facilities.

"(6) An identification of the types of techniques of treatment or disposal which have been used at each facility.

"(c) The Administrator shall establish a special Federal Agency Hazardous Waste Compliance Docket which shall contain each notice transmitted under subsection (a) regarding any facility and notice of each subsequent action taken under this Act with respect to the facility. Such docket shall be available for public inspection at reasonable times. Three months after establishment of the Docket and every three months thereafter, the Administrator shall publish in the Federal Register a list of the Federal facilities which have been included in the Docket during the immediately preceding 3-month period and a list of each facility included in the Docket at which subsequent action has been taken under this Act during the immediately preceding 3-month period. Such publication shall also indicate where in the appropriate regional office of the Environmental Protection Agency additional information may be obtained with respect to any facility on the Docket. The Administrator shall establish a program to provide information to the public with respect to facilities which are included in the Docket under this subsection.

"(d) Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this subsection, the Administrator shall take steps to assure that a preliminary assessment is conducted for each facility for which a notice is required to be transmitted under subsection (a). Following such preliminary assessment, the Administrator shall where appropriate—

"(1) evaluate such facilities in accordance with the criteria established in accordance with section 105 under the National Contingency Plan for determining priorities among releases; and

"(2) include such facilities on the National Priorities List maintained under such Plan.

Such evaluation and listing shall be completed not later than 14 months after the date of the enactment of this section.

"(e)(1) Within 6 months after the inclusion of any facility on the National Priorities List, the department, agency, or instrumentality which owns or operates such facility shall, in consultation with the Administrator, commence a remedial investigation and feasibility study for such facility.

"(2) Within 90 days after completion of each such remedial investigation and feasibility study, the Administrator shall review the results of such investigation and study and shall enter into an interagency agreement with the head of the department, agency or instrumentality concerned for the expeditious completion by such department, agency, or instrumentality of all necessary remedial action at such facility. All such interagency agreements shall comply with the requirements of section 104(j). Such agreement shall require that substantial continuous physical on-site remedial action is commenced at each facility which is the subject of such an agreement within 6 months after the agreement is entered into.

"(B) Each interagency agreement under this paragraph shall include, but shall not be limited to: (i) a review of alternative remedial actions and selection of construction design by the Administrator; (ii) a schedule for the completion of each such remedial action; and (iii) arrangements for long-term operation and maintenance of the facility.

"(3) To the maximum extent practicable, remedial actions at facilities subject to interagency agreements under this section shall be completed within two years from the date the interagency agreement was entered into. If not completed within such period, the department, agency, or instrumentality shall transmit to the Administrator an explanation of why such action was not completed. Such explanation shall be included in the Federal Hazardous Facility Compliance Docket and in the annual report made by the department, agency, or instrumentality under paragraph (4) to the Congress.

"(4) Each department, agency, or instrumentality responsible for compliance with this section shall furnish an annual report to the Congress concerning its progress in implementing the requirements of this section. Such reports shall include, but shall not be limited to—

"(A) a report on the progress in reaching interagency agreements under this section,

"(B) the specific cost estimates and budgetary proposals involved in each interagency agreement,

"(C) a brief summary of the public comments regarding each proposed interagency agreement, and

"(D) a description of the instances in which no agreement was reached.

With respect to instances in which no agreement was reached within the required time period, the department, agency, or instrumentality filing the report under this paragraph shall include in such report an explanation of the reasons why no agreement was reached.

"(f) Except as provided in section 111(e)(3), money in the Hazardous Substances Response Trust Fund shall not be available for actions implementing any interagency agreement under this section.

"(g) The Administrator (represented by the Attorney General as provided in section 107(g)) shall bring an action under section 106 against the head of any department, agency, or instrumentality which fails or refuses to comply with any requirement of this section.

"(h) Except for authorities which are delegated by the Administrator to an officer or employee of the Environmental Protection Agency, no authority vested in the Administrator under this section may be transferred, by executive order of the President or otherwise, to any other officer or employee of the United States or to any other person.

"(i) All guidelines, rules, regulations, procedures, and criteria which are applicable to preliminary assessments carried out under this Act for facilities at which hazardous substances are located, applicable to evaluations of such facilities under the National Contingency Plan, applicable to inclusion on the National Priorities List, or applicable to remedial actions at such facilities shall also be applicable to facilities which are owned and operated by a department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States in the same manner and to the same extent as such guidelines, rules, regulations, and criteria are applicable to other facilities, except for any requirements relating to bonding, insurance, or financial responsibility. No department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States may adopt or utilize any such guidelines, rules, regulations, procedures, or criteria which are inconsistent with the guidelines, rules, regulations, and criteria established by the Administrator under this Act.

"(j) The facilities required to be listed on the National Priorities List under this section shall be in addition to the facilities required to be listed under section 111(k). The schedules and timetables provided under section 111(k) applicable to commencement of remedial investigations and feasibility studies, preliminary assessments, and remedial action shall not apply to facilities which are owned or operated by a department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States.".

EMERGENCY RELIEF AND HEALTH SURVEILLANCE

SEC. 112. Section 104 is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(l)(1)(A) Any individual or group of individuals may submit a petition to the Administrator providing evidence which—

"(i) demonstrates that such individual or individuals are being exposed to any hazardous substance; and

"(ii) provides an empirical analysis of the level of exposure.

"(B) The Administrator shall take action under paragraph (2)(A) if the Administrator determines that there is a reasonable likelihood that such substance is from a facility—

"(i) where such substance is (or was in the past) treated, stored, recycled, or disposed of, on a regular basis; or

"(ii) at which removal action is being taken (or was taken in the past) under any provision of this Act; and if the Administrator determines that the exposure may present a significant risk to human health.

"(2) Within 45 days after receipt of a petition under paragraph (1), the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency (or the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry if designated by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency) shall—

"(A) initiate a hazardous substance exposure evaluation in which the Administrator—

"(i) conducts a toxicological and epidemiological evaluation of each hazardous substance involved, taking into consideration any relevant toxicological profiles prepared pursuant to section 104(i), and determines an appropriate action level for each hazardous substance involved representing the level of exposure to such substance which presents a significant risk to human health;

"(ii) ascertains the nature, magnitude, scope, and duration of the exposure of individuals to the hazardous substance concerned at or above such action level; and

"(iii) identifies, where possible, other individual within the community who are exposed to the same hazardous substance at or above the action level and ascertains the nature, magnitude, scope, and duration of such exposure; or

"(B) publish a written explanation of a determination that there is not a reasonable likelihood that the substance is from a facility referred to in paragraph (1)(B) or a determination that the exposure does not present a significant risk to human health.

"(3)(A) If a hazardous substance exposure evaluation carried out under this subsection identifies an individual or individuals exposed to a hazardous substance at or above the action level, the Administrator shall take such steps as may be necessary to reduce this exposure to levels below the action level. Such steps may include (but shall not be limited to)—

"(i) provision of alternative drinking water supplies, and

"(ii) relocation of individuals.

"(B) In any case in which information is insufficient, in the judgment of the Administrator, to readily determine an appropriate action level with respect to a hazardous substance and there is no toxicological profile established for such substance, the Administrator may take such steps as may be necessary to reduce the exposure of any person to such hazardous substance to such level as the Administrator deems necessary to protect the public health and the environment.

"(4) Within 6 months following completion of the hazardous substance exposure evaluation, the Administrator shall publish a report detailing the presence or absence of any linkage between the exposure of individuals to the hazardous substance concerned and the facility identified under paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection. Such report shall include a determination, where possible, of any groundwater contamination connecting such facility with the exposure.

"(5) Where a hazardous substance exposure evaluation identifies a population of individuals exposed to a hazardous substance at or above the action level and the Administrator has reported the presence of a linkage between such exposure and a facility meeting the conditions specified under paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection, the Administrator shall initiate a health surveillance program for such population. This program shall include the following steps:

"(A) an epidemiological health effects study of the exposed population (with an appropriate control group) to identify any diseases for which the population is at significant risk;

"(B) periodic medical testing to screen for such diseases among those population subgroups at highest risk; and

"(C) a mechanism to refer for treatment those individuals within such population who are screened positive for such diseases.

"(6) In the case of any substance which is subject to a petition under this subsection, nothing in this subsection shall be construed to delay or otherwise impair the authority of the Administrator to exercise any authority vested in the Administrator under any other provision of the law, including, but not limited to, the imminent hazard authority of section 7003 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act or the response and abatement authorities of this Act.".

By Mr. SYNAR:

—On page 52, beginning at line 9, subparagraph (D) is amended to read as follows:

"(D) pipeline facilities regulated under the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968, as amended, (49 U.S.C. 1671 et seq.), or the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act of 1979, as amended, (49 U.S.C.—2001 et seq.), or"

By Mr. TAUZIN:

(Amendment to Ways and Means Committee amendment.)

—After Section 503, insert the following new section and redesignate succeeding sections accordingly:

"SEC. 504. Amendments Related to Environmental Tax on Certain Substances Entered into the United States.

"SEC. 4663. ENVIRONMENTAL TAX ON CERTAIN TAXABLE SUBSTANCES ENTERED INTO THE UNITED STATES.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—There is hereby imposed a tax on any taxable substances entered into the United States which shall be paid by the importer or ultimate purchaser thereof.

"(b) AMOUNT OF TAX.—The tax imposed by subsection (a) on each taxable substance shall be an amount equal to the tax imposed under section 4661 on the taxable feedstock chemicals used to produce or manufacture such taxable substance, as determined in accordance with subsection (d), below.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—

"(1) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section the term 'taxable substance' means any substance immediately derived from any of the taxable chemicals listed in the table under section 4661. A taxable substance is 'immediately derived' from a chemical or chemicals listed in the table under section 4661 if it is directly produced from such listed chemical or chemicals as a raw material or feedstock.

"(d) COMPUTATION OF TAX.—Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service, if the importer of any taxable substances entered into the United States can establish specifically the amount of chemicals listed in section 4661(b) that were used in the manufacture or production of such taxable substance, and this amount is less than the amount computed by the Commissioner under subsection (e) of this section for such taxable substance, then the importer may pay the taxes that would have been paid under section 4661(a) on the sale or use of such chemicals in lieu of the tax that would be imposed under subsection (e) of this section.

"(e) ALTERNATIVE PAYMENT OF TAXES UNDER SEC. 4661.—The Commissioner shall prescribe by regulation the amount of tax, per ton, imposed by subsection (a) on each taxable substance. In determining the amount of tax imposed per ton on each such taxable substance, the Commissioner shall determine the amount, by weight, of any taxable chemical or chemicals listed under section 4661 that is typically consumed, as a raw material or feedstock, to produce or manufacture one ton of such taxable substance, and shall compute a total tax for such taxable substance that is equal to the sum of the taxes that would be imposed, under section 4661, on the amounts of taxable chemical or chemicals consumed in the manufacture of such taxable substance; provided, however, that the Commissioner may establish reasonable de minimus levels for exempting from taxation the chemical content of such taxable substance.

"(f) TAXATION OF NONFERROUS METALS.—This paragraph applies to the taxation of nonferrous metals listed in section 4661(b).

"(1) IMPORTS.—For the purpose of imposing a tax on any taxable chemical entered into the United States as it pertains to a nonferrous metal, or compound or alloy thereof, as listed in the table in section 4661(b), the term "taxable substance," when used in this subsection shall also include the nonferrous metallic content of (i) any fabricated or semi-fabricated product, shape or form, and other product, which has been customarily considered by agencies of the United States Government in calculating annual production, consumption, and import statistics for such metal; (ii) any alloy or compound containing at least five percent of such metal by weight; or (iii) lead acid batteries; provided, however, that the commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service may establish reasonable de minimus levels for exempting from taxation the metal content of any such product or alloy. Except as provided in clause (iii) above, nothing in this subsection shall be construed to impose any tax on the metal content of any end use product for which all manufacturing and processing has been completed and is in a final form for sale to an individual for personal consumption or use.

"(2) IN PROCESS MATERIALS.—For purposes of this subsection, no tax shall be imposed on:

"(A) any of the nonferrous metals listed in section 4661(b) when such metal is present in ores, concentrates, drosses, mattes, or other pre-refined metal-bearing materials, nor before the state of processing at which such metal is commercially known or sold as such. Such metals shall not be deemed to be "used" within the meaning of subsection (c) when utilized as new scrap for recycling/production of such metals. For purposes of this subsection, the term "new scrap" shall refer to the refuse produced in the manufacture of articles for ultimate consumption and reinserted into the same manufacturing process and shall not include such scrap derived from metal articles that have outlived their intended manufactured purpose and usefulness.

"(B) any nonferrous metal compound listed in section 4661(b) which has a transitory presence during any process of smelting, refining, or otherwise extracting any nonferrous metal from ores, concentrates, or other metal bearing substances which are not subject to tax under section 4661(a). The removal by any person for use or sale of any taxable nonferrous metal compound from any process of smelting, refining, or otherwise extracting metal from ores shall be treated as the use of such compounds by such persons, and shall be subject to tax under section 4661(a), unless such compound is to be directly consumed in a smelting or refining process that results in a nonferrous metal not subject to tax under section 4661(a).

"(3) METAL PREVIOUSLY TAXED IN CURRENT PRODUCTION CYCLE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, no tax shall be imposed hereunder on any metal—

"(A) when such metal has previously been taxed in its current cycle of production and use; or

"(B) contained in a fabricated product, alloy or compound when such nonferrous metal was previously taxed in its current cycle of production and use.

"For purposes of this subsection, the term "current cycle of production" refers to completion of the smelting and refining of ores and concentrates into the taxable nonferrous metal and subsequent manufacturing processes utilizing the taxable nonferrous metal, but it shall not include processing of scrap derived from metal articles which have outlived their intended manufactured purpose and usefulness."

(g) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

By Mr. TORRES:

(Amendment to committee print.)

—Page 28, line 20, strike out "subsection" and substitute "subsections".

Page 29, after line 5, insert:

"(e) If any abatement action is taken under this section against a facility used for the treatment, storage, or disposal of hazardous Waste listed or identified under section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, the Administrator shall take such action as necessary to insure that no such listed or identified hazardous waste may be treated, stored, or disposed of at such facility after the date of the enactment of the Superfund Expansion and Protection Act of 1984 if—

"(1) such facility is operating pursuant to interim status under section 3005(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act;

"(2) the owner or operator of the facility has not completed a full hydrogeologic characterization of the facility before the date of the enactment of the Superfund Expansion and Protection Act of 1984 which has been determined to be acceptable to the Administrator;

"(3) a State or local government authority has required the temporary or permanent relocation of individuals residing in the vicinity of the facility because of the release or threatened release of a hazardous substance, or an asphyxiant gas; and

"(4) 75,000 or more individuals reside within a 2.5 mile radius of the facility.

By Mr. VOLKMER:

(Amendment to committee print.)

—Section 112 of the bill is amended by adding following the words "(B) relocation of individuals" the following new language: "or business.

"(1) In the case of an individual unemployed as a result of such relocation the Administrator may provide the assistance authorized by sections 407, 408, and 409 of the Disaster Relief Act of 1974.

"(2) In the case of a business located in an area of relocation the Administrator is authorized to provide the payment of those installments or principal and interest on business debt which accrue between the date of temporary relocation and thirty days following the date that permanent relocation is actually accomplished or in the event, if permanent relocation is formally rejected as the appropriate response, the date on which temporary relocation ceases."

(Amendment to committee print.)

—Following section 101 of the bill insert the following new section and redesignate succeeding sections accordingly.

"COMMUNITY RELOCATION AND BUSINESS AND EMPLOYMENT PROTECTION

"SEC. 102. Section 101(23) is amended by inserting after "not otherwise provided for," the phrase "costs of permanent relocation of residents where it is determined that such permanent relocation is cost effective or may be necessary to protect health or welfare," and by striking out the semicolon at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a period and the following: "In the case of a business located in an area of evacuation or relocation, the term may also include the payment of those installments or principal and interest on business debt which accrue between the date of evacuation or temporary relocation and thirty days following the date that permanent relocation is actually accomplished or, if permanent relocation is formally rejected as the appropriate response, the date on which evacuation or temporary relocation ceases. In the case of an individual unemployed as a result of such evacuation or relocation, it may also include the provisions of the assistance authorized by sections 407,408, and 409 of the Disaster Relief Act of 1974;".

By Mr. WAXMAN:

—Section 202.

(c) PRESUMPTION.—(1) The presumption established under this subsection shall affect only the burden of going forward with the presentation of the case. Nothing in this subsection shall affect the burden of proof which shall remain with the claimant in accordance with the Federal Rules of Evidence.

"(2) In any action brought under this section with respect to harm suffered by any individual, if the plaintiff introduces evidence sufficient to enable the trier of fact to find that—

"(A) the individual was exposed to a hazardous substance found in release,

"(B) such exposure was in a quantity, or for a duration, such that there is reasonable likelihood that such exposure is sufficient to cause or significantly contribute to harm of the class or type which the individual suffered, and

"(C) there exists a reasonable likelihood that exposure to such substance causes or significantly contributes to harm of the class or type which the individual is alleged to have suffered, then it shall be presumed that such release caused such harm.

By Mr. WYDEN:

—Strike out section 506 of the bill and insert in lieu of thereof the following:

SEC. 506. WASTE END TAX.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 38 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to environmental taxes) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subchapter:

"SUBCHAPTER C—WASTE END TAX

"Sec. 4681. Imposition of tax.

"Sec. 4682. Exemptions.

"Sec. 4683. Definitions and special rules.

"SEC. 4681. IMPOSITION OF TAX.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is hereby imposed a tax on the disposal of any hazardous waste required to be carried out in compliance with subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(b) AMOUNT OF TAX.—The amount of the tax imposed by subsection (a) shall be—

"(1) $30 for each metric ton which is not disposed of by underground injection; or

"(2) $3 for each metric ton which is disposed of by underground injection.

"(c) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—The tax imposed by subsection (a) shall be paid by—

"(1) in the case of disposal at a facility which is operating pursuant to a permit under subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act or which is operating pursuant to interim status under such subtitle C, the owner or operator of such facility, and

"(2) in the case of disposal other than at such a facility, the person disposing of the hazardous waste.

"(d) TERMINATION.—The tax imposed by this section shall not apply after September 30, 1990.

"SEC. 4682. EXEMPTIONS.

"The tax imposed by section 4681 shall not apply to the following:

"(1) The disposal of any waste by any person in the course of carrying out any removal or remedial action under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 if such disposal is carried out in accordance with a plan approved by the Administrator or the State.

"(2) The disposal of any solid waste which is required to be studied under subsection (f), (g), (m), (n), or (p) of section 8002 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act unless, after the completion of the studies, a law is enacted subjecting such waste to the tax imposed by section 4681.

"(3) The treatment (not including disposal of any treatment residues) of any hazardous waste in a facility which is regulated under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act.

"(4) Except as provided in section 4683(b), the placement of any hazardous waste in a facility for hazardous waste treatment or storage if such facility is operating pursuant to a permit under subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act or pursuant to interim status under such subtitle C.

"SEC. 4683. DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this subchapter—

"(1) HAZARDOUS WASTE, ETC.—The terms 'waste', 'hazardous waste', 'storage', 'treatment', and 'disposal' have the respective meanings given such terms by section 1004 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act and the regulations promulgated thereunder.

"(2) UNDERGROUND INJECTION.—The term 'underground injection' has the same meaning as when used in the Safe Drinking Water Act.

"(3) TON.—The term 'metric ton' means 1,000 kilograms.

"(b) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(1) WASTE TREATED AS DISPOSED OF NOT LATER THAN 1 YEAR AFTER RECEIPT AT SUBTITLE C FACILITY.—For purposes of this subchapter, in the case of any hazardous waste listed or identified under section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act—

"(A) which has been received by a facility for hazardous waste treatment or storage and on which no tax has been imposed under section 4681 before the expiration of the 1-year period beginning on the date of such receipt, and

"(B) which has not been neutralized or rendered nonhazardous by any treatment process (including any hazardous waste residue of any treatment process), a tax shall be imposed under section 4681 on such hazardous waste in the same manner as if disposal of such hazardous waste occurred on the first day after such 1-year period. Such tax shall be paid by the owner or operator of the facility at which such waste is located on such first day. The tax imposed under section 4681 by reason of this paragraph shall be at the rate which would be applicable under section 4681 if disposal of such hazardous waste occurred on such first day, plus an additional amount equal to the interest payable on 1-year treasury bills maturing on such first day (or on the next following weekday if such first day is a weekend or holiday).

"(2) FRACTIONAL PART OF TON.—In the case of a fraction of a metric ton, the tax imposed by section 4681 shall be the same fraction of the amount of such tax imposed on a whole metric ton."

(b) REVENUES FROM ADDITIONAL TAX DEPOSITED IN HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCE SUPERFUND.—Paragraph (1) of section 9505(b) of such Code (relating to establishment of Hazardous Substance Superfund), as added by this title, is amended by striking out "section 4611 or 4661" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 4611, 4661, or 4681".

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of subchapters for chapter 38 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Subchapter C—Waste End Tax."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE, ETC.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on January 1, 1987.

(2) STUDY, ETC.—

(A) IMPLEMENTATION OF WASTE END TAX.—Not later than April 1, 1985, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to the Congress a report on the progress being made in preparing for the implementation of the waste end tax imposed by subchapter C of chapter 38 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (as added by this section).

(B) ALTERNATIVE WASTE END TAX.—Not later than January 1, 1986, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to the Congress his recommendations (if any) for a waste end tax which—

(i) would raise an amount of revenue equivalent to the anticipated revenue from the waste end tax imposed by such subchapter C, and

(ii) is designed to discourage the disposal of hazardous wastes in environmentally unsound manners (and to accomplish this result with maximum administrative feasibility).

(3) EXCESS REVENUES TO REDUCE APPROPRIATED FUNDS.—It is the sense of the Congress that the amounts appropriated pursuant to section 504(b) of this title for any fiscal year should be reduced by 50 percent of the excess of—

(A) the estimated revenues from the tax imposed by such subchapter C which will be deposited in the Hazardous Substance Superfund during such year, over

(B) $250,000,000.

By Mr. YOUNG of Alaska:

(Amendment to the committee print.)

—At the end of the bill, add the following:

TITLE VI—OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY AND COMPENSATION

SHORT TITLE AND DEFINITIONS

SEC. 601. (a) Titles VI through IX may be cited as the "Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act."

(b) For the purposes of this Act, the term—

(1) "barrel" means forty-two United States gallons at sixty degrees Fahrenheit;

(2) "claim" means a demand in writing for a sum certain;

(3) "cleanup costs" means costs of reasonable measures taken, after an incident has occurred, to prevent, minimize, or mitigate oil pollution from that incident;

(4) "discharge" means any emission, intentional or unintentional, and includes spilling, leaking, pumping, pouring, emptying, or dumping;

(5) "facility" means a structure, or group of structures, which is either—

(A) located, in whole or in part, on the outer Continental Shelf and used for the purposes of exploring for, drilling for, producing, storing, handling, transferring, processing, or transporting oil produced from the outer Continental Shelf, or

(B) licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974;

(6) "foreign claimant" means any person residing in a foreign country, the government of a foreign country, or any agency or political subdivision thereof, who asserts a claim;

(7) "guarantor" means the person, other than the responsible party, who provides evidence of financial responsibility for a responsible party;

(8) "incident" means any occurrence or series of occurrences having the same origin, involving one or more vessels, facilities, or any combination thereof, which causes, or poses a substantial threat, of oil pollution;

(9) "inland oil barge" means a non-self-propelled vessel, carrying oil in bulk as cargo or in residue from cargo and certificated to operate only on the internal waters of the United States while operating in such waters;

(10) "internal waters of the United States" means those waters of the United States lying inside the baseline from which the territorial sea is measured and those waters outside that baseline which are a part of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway;

(11) "lessee" means a person holding a leasehold interest in an oil and gas lease on submerged lands of the Outer Continental Shelf granted or maintained under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(12) "licensee" means a person holding a license issued under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974;

(13) "mobile offshore drilling unit" means every watercraft or other contrivance (other than a public vessel of the United States) capable of use as a means of transportation on water and as a means of drilling for oil on the Outer Continental Shelf;

(14) "natural resources" means living and nonliving resources belonging to, managed by, held in trust by, appertaining to, or otherwise controlled by the United States (including the resources of the fishery conservation zone established by the Fishery Conservation and Management Act of 1976), any State or local government, or any foreign government;

(15) "navigable waters" means the waters of the United States, including the territorial sea;

(16) "oil" means petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom;

(17) "oil pollution" means—

(A) the presence of oil which has been discharged from a vessel or facility in quantities which the President has determined may be harmful pursuant to paragraph (4) of subsection (b) of section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act—

(i) in or on the navigable waters or on land within the United States immediately adjacent thereto; or

(ii) in or on the waters of the contiguous zone established by the United States under article 24 of the Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone; or

(B) the presence of oil (other than natural seepage) in or on the waters of the high seas outside the territorial limits of the United States—

(i) when discharged in connection with activities conducted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(ii) when discharged from a deepwater port licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 or from a vessel transiting to or from a deepwater port and located in a safety zone of a deepwater port licensed under such Act;

(iii) causing injury to or loss of natural resources belonging to, appertaining to, or under the exclusive management authority of, the United States; or

(iv) when discharged, prior to being brought ashore in a port in the United States, from a ship that received oil at the terminal of the pipeline constructed under the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act (43 U.S.C. 1651 et seq.) for transportation to a port in the United States; or

(C) the presence of oil (other than natural seepage) in or on the territorial sea, internal waters, or adjacent shoreline, of a foreign country, in a case where damages are recoverable by a foreign claimant under section 603(b)(6) of this title;

(18) "operator" means—

(A) in the case of a vessel, a charterer by demise or any other person, except the owner, who is responsible for the operation, manning, victualing, and supplying of the vessel; or

(B) in the case of a pipeline, any person, except the owner, who is responsible for the operation of such pipeline by agreement with the owner;

(19) "Outer Continental Shelf" has the meaning set forth in subsection (a) of section 2 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(20) "owner" means, in the case of a vessel or a pipeline, any person holding title to, or in the absence of title, any other indicia of ownership of, the vessel or pipeline, whether by lease, permit, contract, license, or other form of agreement, except that such term does not include a person who, without participating in the management or operation of a vessel or a pipeline, holds indicia of ownership primarily to protect his security interest in the vessel or pipeline;

(21) "permittee" means a person holding an authorization, license, or permit for geological exploration issued under section 11 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(22) "person" means an individual, firm, corporation, association, partnership, consortium, joint venture, or any other commercial, legal, or governmental entity;

(23) "public vessel" means a vessel which—

(A) is owned or chartered by demise, and operated by (i) the United States, (ii) a

State or political subdivision thereof, or (iii) a foreign government, and

(B) is not engaged in commercial service;

(24) "removal costs" means—

(A) costs incurred under subsection (c), (d), or (l) of section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, section 5 of the Intervention on the High Seas Act, or subsection (b) of section 18 of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974, and

(B) cleanup costs, other than the costs described in subparagraph (A);

(25) "responsible party" means—

(A) with respect to a vessel or a pipeline, the owner or operator of such vessel or pipeline;

(B) with respect to a facility (other than a deepwater port or pipeline), the lessee or permittee of the area in which such facility is located, or the holder of a right of use and easement granted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act for the area in which such facility is located where such holder is a different person than the lessee or permittee; and

(C) with repsect to a deepwater port, the licensee;

(26) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation;

(27) "ship" means a vessel (other than an inland oil barge) carrying oil in bulk as cargo or in residue from cargo;

(28) "Trust Fund" means the fund established by section 201 of this Act;

(29) "United States" and "State" include the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States;

(30) "United States claimant" means any person residing in the United States, the Government of the United States or any agency thereof, or the government of a State or a political subdivision thereof, who asserts a claim; and

(31) "vessel" means every description of watercraft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water.

COORDINATION WITH INTERNATIONAL CONVENTIONS

SEC. 602. On and after the first date on which both the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage and the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage are in force with respect to the United States, this title shall not apply with respect to damage arising out of or directly resulting from oil pollution or a substantial threat of oil pollution to the extent this title is inconsistent with such conventions and title IX of this Act.

DAMAGES AND CLAIMANTS

SEC. 603. (a) Claims for damages for economic loss, incurred on or after the effective date of this section and arising out of or directly resulting from oil pollution or the substantial threat of oil pollution, may be asserted for—

(1) removal costs;

(2) injury to, or destruction of, real or personal property;

(3) injury to, or destruction of, natural resources, including reasonable costs incurred by the trustee of the damaged resources in assessing both short-term and long-term injury to, or destruction of, the damaged resources, preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged resources, and restoring or acquiring the equivalent of the damaged resources;

(4) loss of subsistence use of natural resources;

(5) loss of profits or impairment of earning capacity due to injury or destruction of real or personal property or natural resources to the extent that such damages were sustained during the two-year period beginning on the date the claimant first suffered such loss; and

(6) loss of tax revenue for a period of one year due to injury to real or personal property.

(b)(1) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) by any claimant, except that the responsible party with respect to a vessel or facility involved in an incident may assert such a claim only if he can show that he is entitled to a defense to liability under section 604(c) of this title or, if not entitled to such a defense to liability, that he is entitled to a limitation of liability under section 604(b) of this title, in which case the claim may be asserted only to the extent that the sum of the removal costs incurred by the responsible party plus the amounts paid by the responsible party or by the guarantor on behalf of the responsible party for claims asserted under subsection (a) of this section exceeds the amount to which the total of the liability under section 604(a) and removal costs incurred by, or on behalf of, the responsible party is limited under section 604(b).

(2) A claim may be asserted under paragraphs (2) and (4) of subsection (a) by any United States claimant, if the property involved is owned or leased, or the natural resource involved is utilized, by the claimant.

(3) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (3) of subsection (a) by the President, as trustee for natural resources over which the United States Government has sovereign rights or exercises exclusive management authority, or by the Governor of any State for natural resources within the boundary of the State belonging to, managed by, controlled by, or appertaining to the State. Compensation paid under this paragraph may be used only for assessing both short-term and long-term injury to, or destruction of, the damaged resources, preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged resources, and restoring or acquiring the equivalent of the damaged resources.

(4) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (5) of subsection (a) by any United States claimant if the claimant derives at least 25 per centum of his earnings from activities which utilize the property or natural resource or, if such activities are seasonal in nature, 25 per centum of the claimant's earnings during the season in which such activities took place.

(5) A claim may be asserted under paragraph (6) of subsection (a) by any State or political subdivision thereof.

(6) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, a claim may be asserted under paragraphs (2), (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (a) by a foreign claimant to the same extent that a United States claimant may assert a claim if—

(A) the oil pollution occurred in the waters, including the territorial sea, or adjacent shoreline of a foreign country of which the claimant is a resident;

(B) the claimant is not otherwise compensated for his loss;

(C) the oil was discharged from a vessel located within the navigable waters, was discharged in connection with activities conducted under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, or was discharged from a deepwater port licensed under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 or a vessel transitting to or from a deepwater port and located in a safety zone of a deepwater port under such Act; and

(D) recovery is authorized by a treaty or an executive agreement between the United States and the foreign country of which the claimant is a resident, or the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Attorney General and other appropriate officials, certifies that such country provides a comparable remedy for United States claimants.

In the case of any oil pollution involving oil that has been transported through the pipeline constructed under the provisions of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, has been loaded on a vessel for transportation to a port in the United States, and is discharged from such vessel before being unloaded in that port, a claim may be asserted by a resident of Canada without regard to subparagraphs (A), (C), and (D) of this paragraph, to the same extent that a United States claimant may assert a claim.

(7) A claim may be asserted under any paragraph of subsection (a), by the Attorney General, on his own motion or at the request of the Secretary, on behalf of any group of United States claimants who may assert a claim under this subsection.

(c) If the Attorney General fails to act under paragraph (7) of subsection (b) within sixty days after the date on which the Secretary designates a source under section 606, any member of a group may assert a claim for damages on behalf of that group. Failure of the Attorney General to act shall have no bearing on any claim for damages asserted under this section.

LIABILITY

SEC. 604. (a)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection and subsections (b) and (c) of this section, the responsible party with respect to a facility or a vessel (other than a public vessel) that is the source of oil pollution, or poses a substantial threat of oil pollution in circumstances that justify the incurrence of the type of costs described in section 601(b)(24)(A) of this title, shall be jointly, severally, and strictly liable for all damages for which a claim may be asserted under section 603.

(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, in any case in which a mobile offshore drilling unit is being used as a facility and is the source of oil pollution originating on or above the surface of the water or poses the substantial threat of such oil pollution, such unit shall be deemed to be a vessel which is a ship for purposes of this title.

(B) To the extent that damages for which claims may be asserted under section 603 from any incident described in subparagraph (A) exceed the amount for which the responsible party is liable under subparagraph (A) (as such amount may be limited under subsection (b)(2) of this section), the mobile offshore drilling unit shall be deemed to be a facility covered by subsection (b)(4) of this section, except that for purposes of applying subsection (b)(4) the amount specified in such subsection shall be reduced by the amount for which the responsible party with respect to a ship is liable under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

(C) In the case of any incident described in subparagraph (A) which is caused primarily by willful misconduct or gross negligence within the privity or knowledge of both the owner or operator of the mobile offshore drilling unit and the lessee or permittee of the area, or holder of a right of use or easement for the area, in which such unit is located; or which is caused primarily by a violation within the privity or knowledge of both such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder of applicable safety, construction, or operating standards or regulations of the United States; or with respect to which both such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder fail or refuse to report the incident where required by law or to provide all reasonable cooperation and assistance requested by the responsible Federal official in furtherance of cleanup activities, such owner or operator and such lessee or permittee or holder shall be jointly, severally, and strictly liable (without limitation under subsection (b)) for all loss for which a claim may be asserted under section 608 of this title.

(b) Except when the incident is caused primarily by willful misconduct or gross negligence within the privity or knowledge of a responsible party, or is caused primarily by a violation within the privity or knowledge of a responsible party of applicable safety, construction, or operating standards or regulations of the United States; and except when a responsible party fails or refuses to report the incident where required by law or to provide all reasonable cooperation and assistance requested by the responsible Federal official in furtherance of cleanup activities, the total of the liability under subsection (a) of this section and any removal costs incurred by, or on behalf of, such responsible party shall be limited to—

(1) in the case of a vessel other than a ship or an inland oil barge, $150 per gross ton;

(2) in the case of a ship, $1,000,000 or $400 per gross ton, whichever is greater (but not to exceed $40,000,000);

(3) in the case of an inland oil barge, $150,000 or $150 per gross ton, whichever is greater; or

(4) in the case of a facility, $50,000,000.

The Secretary shall, from time to time, report to Congress on the desirability of adjusting the limitations of liability specified in this subsection.

(c)(1) Except when the responsible party has failed or refused to report an incident where required by law, there shall be no liability under subsection (a) of this section if such responsible party proves that the incident—

(A) resulted from an act of war, hostilities, civil war, insurrection, or a natural phenomenon of an exceptional, inevitable, and irresistible character, or

(B) was wholly caused by an act or omission of a person other than—

(i) a responsible party;

(ii) an employee or agent of a responsible party; or

(iii) one whose act or omission occurs in connection with a contractual relationship with a responsible party.

(2) There shall be no liability under subsection (a) of this section—

(A) as to a particular claimant, where the incident or economic loss is caused, in whole or in part, by the gross negligence or willful misconduct of that claimant; or

(B) as to a particular claimant, to the extent that the incident or economic loss is caused by the negligence of that claimant.

(d)(1) Except as provided in title VII the Trust Fund shall be liable for damages for which claims may be asserted under section 603 of this title and which are presented under this title, to the extent that the loss is not otherwise compensated.

(2) Except for the removal costs specified in section 601(b)(24)(A) of this title, there shall be no liability under paragraph (1) of this subsection—

(A) where the incident is caused wholly by an act of war, hostilities, civil war, or insurrection;

(B) as to a particular claimant, where the incident or the economic loss is caused, in whole or in part, by the gross negligence or willful misconduct of that claimant; or

(C) as to a particular claimant, to the extent that the incident or the economic loss is caused by the negligence of that claimant.

(e)(1) In addition to the damages for which claims may be asserted under section 603 of this title, and without regard to any limitation of liability provided in subsection (b) of this section, the responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel, or his guarantor (subject to the guarantor's limitation set forth in subsection (d) of section 605 of this title), shall be liable to the claimant for interest on the amount paid in satisfaction of the claim for the period from the date upon which the claim was presented to the responsible party or guarantor to the date upon which the claimant is paid, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the responsible party or guarantor shall offer to the claimant an amount equal to or greater than that finally paid in satisfaction of the claim to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that amount, inclusive. However, if the responsible party or guarantor shall offer to the claimant, within sixty days of the date upon which the claim was presented, or of the date upon which advertising was commenced pursuant to section 606 of this title, whichever is later, an amount equal to or greater than that finally paid in satisfaction of the claim, the responsible party or guarantor shall be liable for the interest provided in this paragraph only from the date the offer was accepted by the claimant to the date upon which payment is made to the claimant, inclusive.

(2) The interest provided in paragraph (1) shall be calculated at the average of the highest rate for commercial and finance company paper of maturities of one hundred and eighty days or less obtaining on each of the days included within the period for which interest must be paid to the claimant, as published in the Federal Reserve bulletin.

(f)(1) A responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel may not transfer the liability imposed under this section to any other person.

(2) Nothing in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall preclude an agreement whereby a person who, by an agreement with a responsible party with respect to a facility utilized in activities under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, is engaged in such activities, agrees to indemnify the responsible party for the liability imposed under subsection (a) of this section. Nothing in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall prelcude an agreement whereby a person who owns or operates a towing vessel, by an agreement with a responsible party with respect to a non-self-propelled vessel, agrees to indemnify the responsible party for the liability imposed under subsection (a) of this section.

(g) Nothing in this title shall bar a cause of action that a responsible party subject to liability under this section or a guarantor has or would have by reason of subrogation or otherwise against any person.

(h) To the extent that it is in conflict with, or otherwise inconsistent with, any other law relating to liability or the limitation thereof, this section supersedes such other law.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

SEC. 605. (a)(1) The responsible party with respect to each vessel (except a public vessel or a non-self-propelled vessel that does not carry oil as cargo or fuel) over three hundred gross tons that uses a facility or the navigable waters shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility sufficient to satisfy the maximum liability under section 604 of this title to which the responsible party would be exposed in a case where he would be entitled to limit his liability in accordance with subsection (b) of section 604 of this title. In cases where a responsible party owns or operates more than one vessel subject to this subsection, evidence of financial responsibility need be established only to meet the maximum liability applicable to the largest of such vessels.

(2) The Secretary of the Treasury shall withhold or revoke the clearance required by section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of any vessel subject to this subsection that does not have the certification required under this subsection or the regulations issued hereunder.

(3) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may (A) deny entry to any facility, to any port or place in the United States, or to the navigable waters, or (B) detain at the facility or at the port or place in the United States, any vessel subject to this subsection that, upon request, does not produce the certification required under this subsection or regulations issued hereunder.

(b) The responsible party with respect to each facility shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility sufficient to satisfy the maximum amount of liability to which the responsible party would be exposed in a case where he would be entitled to limit his liability in accordance with subsection (b) of section 604 of this title. In cases where the responsible party is responsible for more than one facility subject to this subsection, evidence of financial responsibility need be established only to meet the maximum liability applicable to one such facility.

(c) Financial responsibility under this section may be established by any one, or by any combination, of the following methods acceptable to the Secretary: evidence of insurance, surety bond, qualification as a self-insurer, or other evidence of financial responsibility. Any bond filed shall be issued by a bonding company authorized to do business in the United States.

(d) Any claim authorized by section 603(a) of this title may be asserted directly against any guarantor providing evidence of financial responsibility as required under this section for any responsible party with respect to a facility or vessel. In defending against such a claim, the guarantor may invoke all rights and defenses which would be available to the responsible party under this title. He may also invoke the defense that the incident was caused by the willful misconduct of the responsible party, but he may not invoke any other defense that he might be entitled to invoke in proceedings brought by the responsible party against him.

(e) Nothing in this title shall impose liability with respect to an incident on any guarantor for damages or removal costs which exceeds in the aggregate the amount of financial responsibility which that guarantor has provided for each responsible party. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit any other statutory, contractual, or common law liability of a guarantor to any responsible party for whom such guarantor provides evidence of financial responsibility including, but not limited to, the liability of such guarantor for negotiating in bad faith a settlement of any claim.

DESIGNATION AND ADVERTISEMENT

SEC. 606. (a)(1) When the Secretary receives information of an incident that involves oil pollution, he shall, where possible and appropriate, designate the source or sources of the oil pollution and shall immediately notify the reponsible party and the guarantor, if known, of that designation.

(2) When a source designated is a vessel or facility, and the responsible party or guarantor fails to inform the Secretary, within five days after receiving notification of the designation, of his denial of the designation, the responsible party or guarantor, as required by regulations promulgated by the Secretary, shall advertise the designation and the procedures by which claims may be presented to such responsible party or guarantor. If advertisement is not otherwise made in accordance with this paragraph, the Secretary shall, as he finds necessary, and at the expense of the responsible party or the guarantor involved, advertise the designation and the procedures by which claims may be presented to that responsible party or guarantor.

(b) In a case where—

(1) the responsible party and the guarantor both deny a designation in accordance with paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this section.

(2) the source of the discharge was a public vessel, or

(3) the Secretary is unable to designate the source or sources of the discharge under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of this section,

the Secretary shall, in accordance with section 607 of this title, advertise or otherwise notify potential claimants of the procedures by which claims may be presented to the Trust Fund.

(c) Advertisement under subsection (a) shall commence no later than fifteen days from the date of the designation made thereunder and shall continue for a period of no less than thirty days.

CLAIMS SETTLEMENT

SEC. 607. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, all claims shall be presented to the responsible party or guarantor designated under section 606(a) of this title.

(b) Claims may be presented to the Trust Fund—

(1) where the Secretary has advertised or otherwise notified claimants in accordance with section 606(b) of this title; or

(2) where the responsible party may assert a claim under section 603(b)(1) of this title.

(c) In the case of a claim presented in accordance with subsection (a) of this section, and in which—

(1) each person to whom the claim is presented denies all liability for the claim, for any reason, or

(2) the claim is not settled by any person by payment within sixty days of the date upon which (A) the claim was presented, or (B) advertising was commenced pursuant to section 606(a)(2) of this title, whichever is later, the claimant may elect to commence an action in court against the responsible party or guarantor or to present the claim to the Trust Fund, that election to be irrevocable and exclusive.

(d) In the case of a claim presented in accordance with subsection (a) of this section, where full and adequate compensation is unavailable, either because the claim exceeds a limit of liability invoked under section 604 of this title or because the responsible party and his guarantor are financially incapable of meeting their obligations in full, a claim for the uncompensated damages may be presented to the Trust Fund.

(e) In the case of a claim which has been presented to any person under subsection (a) of this section and which is being presented to the Trust Fund under subsection (c) or (d) of this section, that person, at the request of the claimant, shall transmit the claim and supporting documents to the Trust Fund. The Secretary may, by regulation, prescribe the documents to be so transmitted and the terms under which they are to be transmitted.

(f)(1) The Secretary, in consultation with the Trust Fund, shall establish procedures and standards for the prompt appraisal and settlement of claims against the Trust Fund.

(2) The Trust Fund may use the facilities and services of private insurance and claims adjusting organizations or State agencies in processing claims against the Trust Fund and may contract for those facilities and services.

(3) To the extent necessitated by extraordinary circumstances, where the services of private organizations or State agencies are inadequate, the Trust Fund may use Federal personnel, on a reimbursable basis, to process claims against the Trust Fund.

(g) Any claimant, or any other person suffering legal wrong because of, or adversely affected or aggrieved by, a final determination of the Trust Fund with respect to a claim, may bring an action for judicial review of the determination. Such action shall be brought under section 609 and shall be the exclusive judicial remedy with respect to such final determination of the Trust Fund. Such an action shall be filed not later than thirty days after the Trust Fund issues notification of the final determination. Venue for any such action shall lie in any district wherein the claimant resides, in addition to any district described in section 609(b). The final determination of the Trust Fund shall not be held unlawful or set aside unless the reviewing court finds such determination to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.

ACTIONS TO ENFORCE LIABILITY

SEC. 608. (a)(1) In any action brought under this title against a responsible party or guarantor, both the plaintiff and defendant shall serve a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings therein upon the Trust Fund at the same time those pleadings are served upon the opposing parties.

(2) The Trust Fund may intervene as a party as a matter of right in any action in which a complaint has been served upon it under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(3) In any action to which the Trust Fund is a party, if the responsible party or his guarantor admits liability under this title, the Trust Fund shall be dismissed therefrom to the extent of the admitted liability.

(4) If the Trust Fund has been served a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings in an action referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Trust Fund shall be bound by any judgment entered therein, whether or not the Trust Fund was a party to the action.

(5) If neither the plaintiff nor the defendant serves a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings upon the Trust Fund in an action referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection, the limitation of liability otherwise permitted by subsection (b) of section 604 of this title is not available to the defendant, and the plaintiff shall not recover from the Trust Fund any sums not paid by the defendant.

(b) In any action brought against the Trust Fund, the plaintiff may join any responsible party or his guarantor, and the Trust Fund may implead any person, who is or may be liable to the Trust Fund.

(c) No claim may be presented, nor may any action be commenced for damages recoverable under this title, unless that claim is presented to, or that action is commenced against a responsible party or his guarantor or against the Trust Fund, as to their respective liabilities, within three years from the date of discovery of the economic loss for which a claim may be asserted under subsection (a) of section 603 of this title, or within six years of the date of the incident which resulted in that loss, whichever is earlier.

(d) Any person, including the Trust Fund, who compensates any claimant for an economic loss, compensable under section 603, shall be subrogated to all rights, claims, and causes of action which that claimant has under this title.

(e) In any claim or action by the Trust Fund against any responsible party or guarantor under subsection (d), the Trust Fund shall recover—

(1) for a claim presented to the Trust Fund (where there has been a denial of source designation) under section 607(b)(1), or (where there has been denial of liability) under section 607(c)(1)—

(A) subject only to the limitation of liability to which the defendant is entitled under section 604(b), the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant, without reduction;

(B) interest on that amount, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 604(e), from the date upon which the claim was presented by the claimant to the defendant to the date upon which the Trust Fund is paid by the defendant, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the Trust Fund shall offer to the claimant the amount finally paid by the Trust Fund to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim against the Trust Fund to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that offer, inclusive;

(C) all costs incurred by the Trust Fund by reason of the claim, both of the claimant against Trust Fund and the Trust Fund against the defendant, including, but not limited to, processing costs, investigating costs, court costs, and attorney's fees; and

(2) for a claim presented to the Trust Fund under section 607(c)(2)—

(A) in which the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant exceeds the largest amount, if any, the defendant offered to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim of the claimant against the defendant—

(i) subject to dispute by the defendant as to any excess over the amount offered to the claimant by the defendant, the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant;

(ii) interest, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 604(e), for the period specified in paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection; and

(iii) all costs incurred by the Trust Fund by reason of the claim of the Trust Fund against the defendant, including, but not limited to, processing costs, investigating costs, court costs, and attorney's fees; or

(B) in which the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant is less than or equal to the largest amount the defendant offered to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim of the claimant against the defendant—

(i) the amount the Trust Fund has paid to the claimant, without reduction;

(ii) interest, at the rate calculated in accordance with section 604(e), from the date upon which the claim was presented by the claimant to the defendant to the date upon which the defendant offered to the claimant the largest amount referred to in this subclause, except that if the defendant tendered the offer of the largest amount referred to in this subparagraph within sixty days after the date upon which the claim of the claimant was either presented to the defendant or advertising was commenced under section 106, the defendant shall not be liable for interest for that period; and

(iii) interest from the date upon which the claim of the Trust Fund against the defendant was presented to the defendant to the date upon which the Trust Fund is paid, inclusive, less the period, if any, from the date upon which the defendant shall offer to the Trust Fund the amount finally paid to the Trust Fund in satisfaction of the claim of the Trust Fund to the date upon which the Trust Fund shall accept that offer, inclusive.

(f) The Trust Fund shall pay over to the claimant that portion of any interest the Trust Fund shall recover, under subsections (e)(1) and (e)(2)(A) for the period from the date upon which the claim of the claimant was presented to the defendant to the date upon which the claimant was paid by the Trust Fund, inclusive, less the period from the date upon which the Trust Fund offered to the claimant the amount finally paid to the claimant in satisfaction of the claim to the date upon which the claimant shall accept that offer, inclusive.

(g) The Trust Fund is entitled to recover for all interest and costs specified in subsection (e) without regard to any limitation of liability to which the defendant may otherwise be entitled.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

SEC. 609. (a) The United States district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction over all controversies arising under titles VI, VII and VIII of this Act, without regard to the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy.

(b) Unless otherwise provided in this Act, venue shall lie in any district wherein the injury complained of occurred, or wherein the defendant resides, may be found, or has his principal office. For purposes of this section, the Trust Fund shall reside in the District of Columbia.

RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAW

SEC. 610. (a) Except as provided in this title—

(1) no action may be brought in any court of the United States, or of any State or political subdivision thereof, for an economic loss compensable under this title,

(2) no person may be required to contribute to any fund, the purpose of which is to compensate for damages for an economic loss described in section 603(a), except that, for a period of three years beginning on the effective date of this section, any State which on the effective date of this section has in effect a statute that requires such contributions may continue to require such contributions within the limits established by such statute as those limits exist on such date, and

(3) no person may be required to establish or maintain evidence of financial responsibility relating to the satisfaction of a claim compensable under this title.

(b) Nothing in this Act shall preclude any State from imposing a tax or fee upon any person or upon oil in order to finance the purchase and prepositioning of oil pollution cleanup and removal equipment or to finance other preparations for responding to a discharge of oil which affects such State.

(c) Nothing in subsection (a) shall prohibit an action by the Trust Fund under any other provision of law to recover compensation paid under this title.

PENALTIES

SEC. 611. Any person who, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, is found to have failed to comply with the requirements of section 605 of this title or the regulations issued thereunder or with any denial or detention order shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty, not to exceed $10,000 for each violation. The amount of the civil penalty shall be assessed by the Secretary by written notice. In determining the amount of such penalty, the Secretary shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the prohibited acts committed and, with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require. The Secretary may compromise, modify, or remit with or without conditions, any civil penalty which is subject to imposition or which has been imposed under this section. If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become final, the Secretary may refer the matter to the Attorney General for collection.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 612. There are authorized to be appropriated for those fiscal years which begin on or after October 1, 1984, such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act.

TITLE VII—COMPREHENSIVE OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY TRUST FUND

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COMPREHENSIVE OIL POLLUTION LIABILITY TRUST FUND

SEC. 701. (a) The Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund is established as a nonprofit corporate entity. The Trust Fund shall consist of—

(1) fees paid into the Trust Fund under section 702,

(2) amounts recovered or collected on behalf of the Trust Fund under title VI of this Act, and

(3) amounts transferred to the Trust Fund under sections 802(f) and 802(g) of this Act.

(b) The Trust Fund shall be administered by a Board of Directors under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

(c)(1) The Board of Directors shall consist of nine voting directors appointed by the Secretary as follows—

(A) three shall be representatives of persons who are liable for fees imposed under this title;

(B) three shall be individuals (including, but not limited to, representatives of any State or political subdivision thereof) who are potential claimants under paragraph (2), (4), or (5) of section 603(b) of this Act; and

(C) three shall be individuals from the general public, who are not eligible for appointment under subparagraph (A), and who have particular expertise, knowledge, and experience in the field of oil spill liability and compensation (including, but not limited to, environmental or labor representatives or guarantors).

(2) Not more than five voting directors shall be members of any one political party. All directors shall be citizens of the United States.

(3) The term of office of each director shall be six years, except that of the directors first appointed three shall be appointed for terms of two years, three shall be appointed for terms of four years, and three shall be appointed for terms of six years. Any director appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of that term.

(4) The Secretary or his delegate shall serve as a nonvoting member of the Board of Directors.

(5) The levels of compensation of the Board of Directors shall be fixed initially by the Secretary and may be adjusted from time to time upon recommendation by the Board of Directors and concurrence of the Secretary. Any member of the Board of Directors who is an officer or employee of the United States, and any other member of the Board of Directors who is prohibited by the terms of his employment from receiving additional compensation, shall receive no additional compensation on account of that member's service on the Board of Directors.

(6) Any director may be removed from office by the Secretary only for neglect of duty, malfeasance in office, or incompetence, or if the director no longer qualifies to be a director under paragraph (1).

(7) The Board of Directors shall meet at least once a year. A majority of the voting members of the Board of Directors shall constitute a quorum, and any action by the Board of Directors shall be effected by majority vote of the voting members of the Board of Directors.

(8) All meetings of the Board of Directors held to conduct official business of the Trust Fund shall be open to public observation and shall be preceded by reasonable public notice. The Board of Directors may close a meeting if the meeting is likely to disclose—

(A) information the premature disclosure of which would be likely to lead to speculation in investments of the Trust Fund; or

(B) information which is likely to adversely affect financial or securities markets or institutions.

(9) The determination to close any meeting of the Board of Directors for any of the purposes specified in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (7) shall be made in a meeting of the Board of Directors open to public observation preceded by reasonable notice. The Board of Directors shall prepare minutes of any meeting which is closed to the public and such minutes shall be made promptly available to the public, except for those portions thereof which, in the judgment of the Board of Directors, may be withheld under the provisions of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (7).

(d)(1) The Board of Directors shall appoint a chief executive officer of the Trust Fund who shall be responsible for the administration of the Trust Fund.

(2) The Board of Directors shall—

(A) establish the offices and appoint the officers of the Trust Fund and define their duties;

(B) fix the compensation of individual officer positions and categories of other employees of the Trust Fund taking into consideration the rates of compensation in effect under the Executive Schedule and the General Schedule prescribed by subchapters II and III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code for comparable positions or categories. If the Board of Directors determines that it is necessary to fix the compensation of any officer position or category of other positions at a rate or rates in excess of that prescribed for level I of the Executive Schedule under section 5312 of title 5, the Board of Directors may transmit to the Secretary its recommendations with respect to the rates of compensation it deems advisable for such positions and categories. Such recommendations shall become effective at the beginning of the first pay period which begins after the thirtieth day following the transmittal of such recommendations unless the Secretary has specifically disapproved such recommendation and notified the Board of Directors to such effect; and

(C) provide a system of organization to fix responsibility and promote efficiency.

(3) Except as specifically provided herein, directors, officers, and employees of the Trust Fund shall not be subject to any law of the United States relating to governmental employment.

(4) The chief executive officer shall appoint such employees as may be necessary for the transaction of the Trust Fund's business to, and may discharge such employees from, positions established in accordance with this section.

(5) No political test or qualification shall be used in selecting, appointing, promoting, or taking other personnel actions with respect to officers, agents, and employees of the Trust Fund, except as provided in subsection (c)(1) of this section.

(6) The Board of Directors may provide for reimbursement of directors, officers, and employees for travel expenses and per diem.

(e) The Trust Fund and its income and property shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, except that—

(1) any real property owned in fee by the Trust Fund shall be subject to State, territorial, county, municipal, or other local taxation to the same extent, according to its value, as other similarly situated and used real property, without discrimination in the valuation, classification, or assessment thereof; and

(2) the Trust Fund and its employees shall be subject to any nondiscriminatory payroll and employment taxes intended to finance benefits based upon employment (such as social security and unemployment benefits) to the same extent as any privately owned corporation.

(f) The Trust Fund shall have the power to sue and be sued in its own name and to exercise all other lawful powers necessarily or reasonably related to the establishment of the Trust Fund and the exercise of its functions and duties under this Act.

(g)(1) The Trust Fund shall have an independent annual audit prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles.

(2) Not later than one hundred and twenty days after the end of each fiscal year of the Trust Fund, the Trust Fund shall submit to the Congress and the Secretary an annual report containing the audit prepared under paragraph (1) and information regarding the organization, procedures, and activities of the Trust Fund during the preceding fiscal year.

(h) The principal office of the Trust Fund shall be located in the District of Columbia.

(i) Except to the extent expressly provided herein, the Trust Fund shall not be deemed to be an agency of the United States or an instrumentality of the United States.

(j) This title shall be considered the articles of incorporation for the Trust Fund.

FUND COLLECTIONS

SEC. 702. (a) A fee of 1.3 cents a barrel shall be paid into the Trust Fund by the owner of—

(1) oil received at a United States refinery;

(2) oil entered into the United States for consumption, use, or warehousing; and

(3) oil produced from a well located in the United States which is used in or exported from the United States.

(b) The Secretary, in consultation with the Trust Fund, shall by regulation establish procedures for the collection of the fee imposed by subsection (a).

(c) The fee imposed by subsection (a) shall only be in effect during those times when the amount in the Trust Fund (including the value of any securities held by the Trust Fund pursuant to section 703(b)) is less than $200,000,000.

(d) No fee shall be collected under this section with respect to any oil if the person who would be liable for the fee establishes that a prior fee has been imposed by this section with respect to that oil.

(e) The Trust Fund may bring an action in the district court of the United States for the collection of any fee required to be paid under this section.

(f) Any person who fails to collect or pay any fee as required by this section shall be liable for a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000, to be assessed by the Secretary of Transportation, in addition to the fee required to be collected or paid and the interest on such fee in an amount equal to the amount such fee would have earned if collected or paid when due and invested in accordance with subsection (b) of section 703. Upon the failure of any person so liable to pay any penalty, fee, or interest upon demand, the Attorney General may, at the request of the Secretary of Transportation, bring an action in the name of the Fund against that person for such amount.

TRUST FUND DISBURSEMENT AND INVESTMENT

SEC. 703. (a) The Trust Fund shall be available for the purposes of—

(1) immediate payment of removal costs described in section 601(b)(24)(A) and of reasonable costs incurred by the trustee under section 603(a)(3) in assessing damaged natural resources and preparing a restoration and acquisition plan with respect to the damaged natural resources;

(2) the payment of claims under title VI of this Act for damage which is not otherwise compensated;

(3) the costs of administration of this Act; and

(4) the payment of initial and annual contributions to the International Fund in accordance with section 904 of this Act.

(b) All sums not needed for purposes of subsection (a) shall be invested prudently in income producing securities approved by the Secretary in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary. Income from these securities shall be added to the principal of the Trust Fund, except that whenever the amount in the Trust Fund, except that whenever the amount in the Trust Fund (including the value of such securities) exceeds $300,000,000, the amount of any income from such securities shall be rebated on a pro rata basis to the owners of the oil who contributed fees to the Trust Fund. If any owner no longer exists or income cannot otherwise be rebated after due diligence to do so, the income shall be retained by the Trust Fund.

LIMITATION ON PAYMENT OF CLAIMS BY THE TRUST FUND

SEC. 704. (a) No amount in the Trust Fund may be used to pay any claim, other than a claim for removal costs, to the extent that the payment of that claim would reduce the amount in the Trust Fund to an amount less than $30,000,000.

(b) If at any time the Trust Fund is unable by reason of subsection (a) to pay all of the claims, other than for removal costs, payable at that time, those claims shall, to the extent permitted under subsection (a), be paid in full in the order in which they were finally determined. Subject to approval of the Secretary, the Trust Fund may borrow amounts from any commercial credit source, at the best available terms, for purposes of paying such claims in such order.

(c) The liability of the Trust Fund under this Act with respect to one incident shall not exceed $100,000,000. If the Trust Fund is unable by reason of the preceding sentence to pay all claims with respect to the incident, the claims shall be reduced proportionately.

ANNUAL AUDIT REVIEW

SEC. 705. The Comptroller General shall review the audit required by section 701(g)(1) and shall submit a report of its review to Congress.

COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS OF THIS ACT

SEC. 706. (a) If any provision of this Act provides that the balance in any fund (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as the "transferor fund") is to be transferred to the Trust Fund, any claim which arises before October 1, 1984 (to the extend such claim would have been payable out of the transferor fund), shall be payable out of the Trust Fund notwithstanding any of the limitations imposed by this title.

(b)(1) If the Secretary or his delegate determines that there is a TAP fund deficit, the fee imposed by section 702(a) on oil first transported through the Trans-Alaska Pipeline after the date of such determination shall be increased by 2 cents per barrel until the total amount of the increased fees equals such deficit.

(2) For purposes of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the term "TAP fund deficit" means the excess (if any) of—

(A) the amount certified by the Secretary of the Interior as the total amount of the claims outstanding against the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund under section 802(b)(2) of this Act, over

(B) the total amount of the assets of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund as of the effective date of this section.

DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES

SEC. 707. (a) For purposes of this title, the term "United States" includes the outer Continental Shelf and any foreign trade zone of the United States.

(b) In the case of any United States refinery which produces natural gasoline from natural gas, the gasoline so produced shall be treated as received at the refinery at the time so produced.

(c) In the case of a fraction of a barrel, the fee imposed by section 702(a) of this title shall be the same fraction of the amount of the fee imposed on a whole barrel.

TITLE VIII—REGULATIONS, EFFECTIVE DATES, AND SAVINGS PROVISIONS

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 801. (a) This section, section 601, section 602, section 612, title VII (other than section 702 (a), (c), (d), (e), and (f), section 703, and section 704), section 803, and each provision of title VI that authorizes the promulgation of regulations shall be effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) Title IX shall take effect on the first date on which both the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage and the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage are in force with respect to the United States.

(c) All other provisions of titles VI through IX and the regulations issued thereunder, shall be effective on the one hundred and eightieth day after the date of enactment of this Act, except that the penalty prescribed by section 611 for failure to comply with the requirements of section 605 or the regulations issued thereunder shall not be effective until the ninetieth day after issuance of those regulations or the two hundred and seventieth day after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is earlier.

(d) Any regulation respecting financial responsibility, issued pursuant to any provision of law repealed by section 802 of this title, and in effect on the day immediately preceding the effective date of section 802 of this title shall remain in force until superseded by regulations issued under title VI of this Act.

CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 802. (a) The first sentence of subsection (b) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act (43 U.S.C. 1653(b); 87 Stat. 586) is amended by inserting "in the State of Alaska" after "any area" and by inserting "related to the trans-Alaska oil pipeline" after "any activities". Such subsection is further amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "This subsection shall not apply to removal costs resulting from oil pollution as that term is defined in section 601(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(b)(1) Subsection (c) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act is repealed. All assets of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund, as of the effective data of this section, except for assets equal to the total amount of claims certified by the Secretary under paragraph (2) of this subsection, shall be rebated directly to the operator of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline for payment on a pro rata basis to the owners of the oil at the time it was loaded on the vessel. The Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund under terms of subsection (c) of section 204 of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, and shall assume all liability incurred by the officers or trustees in the execution of their duties involving the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund, other than the liability of those officers or trustees for gross negligence or willful misconduct.

(2) The Secretary of the Interior shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the total amount of the claims outstanding against the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund not later than one hundred and eighty days after the effective date of this section. In the event that the total amount of the actual claims settled is less than the total amount of the outstanding claims certified, the difference between these amounts shall be rebated directly to the operator of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline for payment, on a pro rata basis, to the owners of the oil at the time it was loaded on the vessel.

(c) Section 17 of the Intervention on the High Seas Act (33 U.S.C. 1486; 88 Stat. 10) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. The fund established under title VII of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act shall be available to the Secretary for actions and activities relating to oil pollution (as defined in section 601(b) of that Act) taken under section 5 of this Act. The fund established under section 311(k) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act shall be available for actions and activities relating to other pollution taken under section 5 of this Act.".

(d) Section 311 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (17) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following new paragraph:

"(18) 'person in charge' means the individual immediately responsible for the operation of a vessel or facility.".

(2) Paragraph (5) of subsection (b) is amended in the last sentence by inserting after "person" the following: "or his employer".

(3) Subparagraph (A) of paragraph (6) of subsection (b) is amended—

(A) in the first and second sentences, by striking out "or person in charge" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "person in charge, or employer of such person in charge"; and

(B) in the third sentence, by striking out "the owner or operator" and inserting in lieu thereof "whoever being".

(4) Subparagraph (B) of paragraph (6) of subsection (b) is amended in the first and second sentences by striking out "or person in charge" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "person in charge, or employer of such person in charge".

(5) Subsection (c)(2)(H) is amended by striking out "from the fund established under subsection (k) of this section for the reasonable costs incurred in such removal" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "for the reasonable costs incurred in such removal (i) from the fund established under section 701 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act in the case of any discharge from a vessel of petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom, or from a facility (as defined by title VI of such Act) or (ii) from the fund established under subsection (k) of this section in any other case".

(6)(A) Subsection (d) is amended by inserting immediately before the last sentence the following: "Any expense incurred under this subsection or under the Intervention on the High Seas Act (or the convention defined in section 2(3) thereof) as the result of the discharge or imminent discharge from a vessel of petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom, shall be reimbursed from the fund established under section 701 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(B) Subsection (d) is further amended by striking out "Any" in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "Any other".

(7) Subsection (f)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the first place it appears and by striking out "carrying oil" and inserting in lieu thereof "carrying such oil".

(8) Subsection (f)(3) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined by section 601(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the first place it appears.

(9)(A) The first sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the second place it appears, by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 601(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the first place it appears.

(B) The second sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 601(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the second place it appears.

(C) The third sentence of subsection (g) is amended by inserting "such" before "oil" the first place it appears and by striking out "carrying oil" and inserting in lieu thereof "carrying such oil".

(10)(A) Subsection (i)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than a facility as defined in section 601(b) of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act)" after "facility" the second place it appears.

(B) Subsection (i)(2) is repealed and paragraph (3) of subsection (i) (and all references thereto) is redesignated as paragraph (2).

(11) Subsection (p)(1) is amended by inserting "(other than petroleum, including crude oil or any fraction or residue therefrom)" after "oil" the first place it appears.

(e) The Deepwater Port Act of 1974 (33 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.; 88 Stat. 2126) is amended as follows:

(1) Section 4(c)(1) is amended by striking out "section 18(l) of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 605 of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act".

(2) Subsections (b), (d), (e,) (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (l), and (n) of section 18 are repealed.

(3) Paragraph (3) of subsection (c) of section 18 is amended by striking out "Deepwater Port Liability Fund established pursuant to subsection (f) of this section." and inserting in lieu thereof "fund established under title VII of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act.".

(4) Subsection (k) of section 18 is amended to read as follows:

"(k) This section shall not be interpreted to preclude any State from imposing additional requirements, not inconsistent with the provisions of the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act, for any discharge of oil from a deepwater port or a vessel within any safety zone.".

(5) Subsections (c), (k), and (m) of section 18 are redesignated as subsections (b), (c), and (d), respectively.

(f) Any amounts remaining in the Deepwater Port Liability Fund established by section 18(f) of the Deepwater Port Act of 1974 shall subject to appropriations, be deposited in the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund established by title VII of this Act. The Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Deepwater Port Liability Fund under the Deepwater Port Act of 1974.

(g) Title III of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendment of 1978 (Public Law 95-372) is repealed. Any amounts remaining in the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund established under section 302 of that title shall subject to appropriations, be deposited in the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund established by title VII of this Act. The Trust Fund shall assume all liability incurred by the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund under title III of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 803. If any provision of this Act or the applicability thereof is held invalid, the remainder of this Act shall not be affected thereby.

TITLE IX—IMPLEMENTATION OF CONVENTIONS

RECOGNITION OF THE INTERNATIONAL FUND

SEC. 901. The International Oil Pollution Comnpensation Fund (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "International Fund") established by article 2 of the International Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution Damage (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "International Fund Convention") is recognized under the laws of the United States as a legal person and shall have the capacity under the laws of the United States to contract, to acquire and dispose of real and personal property, and to institute and be a party to legal proceedings. The Director of the International Fund is recognized as the legal representative of the International Fund. The Director shall be deemed to have appointed irrevocably the Secretary of State his agent for service of process in any action against the International Fund in any court in the United States.

SERVICE OF PROCESS AND INTERVENTION

SEC. 902. (a) In any action brought in a court in the United States against the owner of a ship or his guarantor under the International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "Civil Liability Convention"), the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, shall serve a copy of the complaint and any subsequent pleading therein upon the International Fund and the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund at the same time the complaint or other pleading is served upon the opposing parties.

(b) The International Fund may intervene as a party as a matter of right in any action brought in a court in the United States against the owner of a ship or his guarantor under the Civil Liability Convention.

(c) If the International Fund has been served a copy of the complaint and all subsequent pleadings in an action referred to in subsection (a) of this section, the International Fund shall be bound by any judgment entered therein, whether or not the International Fund was a party to the action.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION

SEC. 903. The International Fund and its assets shall be exempt from all direct taxation in the United States.

PAYMENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS

SEC. 904. The amount of any initial or annual contribution to the International Fund which is required to be made under article 10 of the International Fund Convention by any person with respect to oil received in any port, terminal installation, or other installation located in the United States shall be paid to the International Fund by the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability Trust Fund. Before the International Fund Convention enters into force with respect to the United States, the President shall make, and deposit with the Secretary-General of the International Maritime Organization, a declaration under article 14 of the International Fund Convention that the United States assumes the obligation to pay contributions under article 10 of such Convention in respect of oil received within the territory of the United States and that such amount will be paid from the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability-Trust Fund.

JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURTS

SEC. 905. (a) The United States district courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of—

(1) all controversies arising in the territory, including the territorial sea, of the United States under the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention, and

(2) all controversies arising outside of the territory, including the territorial sea, of the United States under the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention, from an incident which causes damage in the territory of the United States, including the territorial sea, without regard to the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy.

(b) Venue shall lie in any district wherein the injury complained of occurred, or wherein the defendant resides, may be found, or has his principal office. For purposes of this subsection, the International Fund shall reside in the District of Columbia.

RECOGNITION OF JUDGMENTS

SEC. 906. Any final judgment of a court of any nation which is a party to the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention in an action for compensation under either such convention shall be recognized by any court of the United States or of a State when that judgment has become enforceable in such nation and is no longer subject to ordinary forms of review, except where—

(1) the judgment was obtained by fraud; or

(2) the defendant was not given reasonable notice and a fair opportunity to present his case.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

SEC. 907. (a) The owner of each ship which is documented under the laws of the United States and is carrying more than two thousand tons of oil in bulk as cargo shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility in amounts sufficient to cover the maximum liability of such owner for pollution damage arising from one incident under the Civil Liability Convention. The Secretary shall issue a certificate to each such owner who complies with this paragraph, in the form and manner required by the Civil Liability Convention.

(b) With respect to any ship owned by the United States, the Secretary shall issue a certificate stating that the ship is owned by the United States and that the ship's liability is covered within the limits of liability prescribed by the Civil Liability Convention.

(c) The owner of each ship (other than a ship to which subsection (a) or (b) applies), wherever registered, which is carrying more than two thousand tons of oil in bulk as cargo and which enters or leaves a port or offshore terminal in the United States (including the territorial seas) shall establish and maintain, in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, evidence of financial responsibility in amounts sufficient to cover the maximum liability of such owner for pollution damage arising from one incident under the Civil Liability Convention. The owner of a ship which is registered in, or flying the flag of, a nation which is a party to the Civil Liability Convention shall be considered to have met the requirements of this paragraph if the ship is carrying a certificate issued by such nation attesting that insurance or other financial security is in force which meets the requirements of such Convention.

(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall withhold or revoke the clearance required by section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of any ship which does not have a certificate showing compliance with the requirements of financial responsibility under subsection (a) or (c) of this section.

(e) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may (1) deny entry to any facility, to any port or place in the United States, or to the navigable waters, or (2) detain at the facility or at the port or place in the United States, any vessel subject to this section that, upon request, does not produce the certificate required under this section or regulations issued hereunder.

(f) Any person who, after notice and an opportunity for a hearing, is found to have failed to comply with the requirements of this section or the regulations issued under this section or with any denial or detention order shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty, not to exceed $10,000 for each violation. The amount of the civil penalty shall be assessed by the Secretary by written notice. In determining the amount of such penalty, the Secretary shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the prohibited acts committed and, with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, any history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require. The Secretary may compromise, modify, or remit with or without conditions any civil penalty which is subject to imposition or which has been imposed under this subsection. If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become final, the Secretary may refer to the matter to the Attorney General for collection.

WAIVER OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY

SEC. 908. The United States waives all defenses based on its status as a soverign State with respect to any controversy arising under the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention relating to any ship owned by the United States and used for commercial purposes.

DEFINITION OF FRANC

SEC. 909. Notwithstanding any provision of the Civil Liability Convention or the International Fund Convention to the contrary, one franc equals one-fifteenth of a special drawing right, as defined by the International Monetary Fund, for purposes of applying such conventions.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 910. The Secretary may issue such rules and regulations as are necessary to implement the Civil Liability Convention and the International Fund Convention.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

MILITARY READINESS: A GROWING PROBLEM

HON. CHARLES McC. MATHIAS, JR.
OF MARYLAND
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, while the current military readiness picture may be good—and even getting better—the long-term effectiveness of our Armed Forces may indeed be in danger.

It seems to me there are two potential problems: the nature of the defense budget itself, and the financial burdens imposed by an unprecedented number of new starts in strategic weapons systems.

The defense budget is becoming uncontrollable. Prior year obligations are consuming an ever larger share of a given fiscal year budget request. Approximately 35 percent of the fiscal year 1985 defense budget request is untouchable, up almost 30 percent since 1981. The Congressional Budget Office projects that the untouchable share of the defense budget will continue to rise through 1989.

In a period when all of us are trying to make prudent reductions in Federal spending, including defense expenditures, this leaves fewer and fewer areas for the President, the Armed Services Committees, and finally the Congress to cut. And of the areas that remain, one is forced to choose between investment accounts—procurement of new systems, and so forth—and readiness accounts—spare parts, ammunition, salaries.

Traditionally, it is in the readiness side of the ledger that cuts have been made. And there's the rub. Instant gratification in budget cutting can only be achieved by attacking the readiness accounts where a virtual dollar-for-dollar ratio exists between amounts cut and saved. And, as bills come due in the latter half of this decade for the big procurement items, the tendency to whittle away at readiness in order to pay for these systems will be even stronger.

This, admittedly, leaves the Congress in a tough spot. We have no alternative but to identify and eliminate some highly visible weapons programs, if the burgeoning defense budget is ever to be brought under control. Congress must focus on the investment accounts. And the sooner we do it, the easier it will be to do because Congress has authorized and appropriated an unprecedented level of funding for investments, especially strategic nuclear programs. Simply drawing out procurement, or cutting a program in half will only postpone what will then be a larger crunch in the 1985-90 timeframe.

Aerospace America magazine recently published an article in which these very points were discussed, and in considerable detail. I insert the Aerospace America article entitled "Pentagon's Bright New World Fading Fast" in the RECORD:

[From the Aerospace America, July 1984]

PENTAGON'S BRIGHT NEW WORLD FADING FAST

(By Henry Simmons)

Remember those gloomy predictions of three years ago, when President Reagan announced his five-year defense plan? The ink was hardly dry before the bean counters warned that the president had vastly underestimated the cost of his ambitious munitions program. Late in the decade, they said, the Pentagon would have to make huge new demands on the American purse to sustain its programs.

According to a recent calculation by the General Accounting Office, actual DOD spending from 1980 to 1984 overran estimates by $246 billion. This trend, continuing over the life of the present five-year plan, implies a $324 billion overrun simply to sustain program now underway or scheduled to get underway during the period.

The scope and imminence of the Pentagon's problem can be gaged from the volume of obligated but unspent "carryover" funds committed under contract for shipbuilding and other procurement. In three years through FY83, the backlog climbed 89%, from $68 billion to $128 billion. Over the same period, the backlog of carryover not only unspent but as yet committed to contract has climbed 79%, from $24 billion to $43 billion. MIT's William Kaufman has analyzed these figures for the Brookings Institution. He believes that their sheer size will make increasingly difficult congressional control over military spending in the outyears. "These backlogs will create major wedges of expenditure in the future and will make substantially more difficult any future effort to control the growth of the defense budget in an orderly way," according to Kaufman.

Even if Congress hold the FY85 military appropriation to $290 billion (the level set both by House vote in May on defense authorization and the cuts proposed by Defense Secretary Weinberger to provide the defense share of the "down payment" on the deficit that the president and Congress are trying to work out), spending from the backlog alone would increase to more than $110 billion in FY86. "As such," Kaufman says, "it will mean that at least 36% of defense outlays will be committed and uncontrollable even before Congress takes action on the budget for that year."

The chickens have not come home to roost yet, but already one can hear the flapping of wings. In rolling back the FY85 defense request, the House Armed Services Committee was most protective of conventional warfare systems and force readiness, but willing to let strategic nuclear systems take their lumps. Weinberger's sacrifices were quite the opposite, insulating the strategic buildup while cutting back the general forces.

Looking down the road, it is obvious that many more tough decisions will have to be made about what to keep, cut back, postpone, and what to jettison. Richard DeLauer, defense under secretary for research and engineering, told Sen. Ted Stevens (D-Alaska) that he could "handle" congressional refusal of new starts for the $1 billion DDG-51 guided missile destroyer as well as the $129 million requested for development of the McDonnell Douglas C-17 STOL transport in the current fiscal year. The House has already canceled further Air Force participation in the "Sons of Assault Breaker," JSTARS and JTACMS, representing radar, communications, computation, ballistic launcher, and submunition of the system proposed for disruption of second- and third-echelon Warsaw Pact forces in European land battle. The decision reflected not so much budgetary constraints as exasperation at the utter failure of the Air Force and Army to agree on a common system to meet the deep-strike requirement and the evident evolution of the program into two separate, duplicative weapons to perform the same mission.

The Pentagon's financial bind may strangle follow-on systems planned for the 1990s—the single-warhead Midgetman mobile ICBM, the Stealth bomber optimized for minimum radar signature, and the second-generation advanced cruise missile with low-observable features of the Stealth.

Both the B-1 and the MX were called "interim" systems—the idea being that they would plug the "window of vulnerability" anticipated in the U.S.-Soviet strategic balance in the mid-80s. MX deployment would phase out with the arrival of the supposedly survivable Midgetman, and B-1 deployment would cease with the advent of the Stealth. The bipartisan Scowcroft Panel laid particular stress on this scenario in selling the 10-warhead MX to a reluctant Congress last year, noting also that the introduction of the large missile would establish a bargaining chip in arms-control talks with the Soviet Union. That argument narrowly prevailed in the House this year, overcoming a Democratic effort to deny all production funding for MX.

In the eyes of many lawmakers the MX is a destabilizer. Because of its size and accuracy it will act as a magnet, the detractors say, rather than a deterrent to Soviet attack. That it partially redresses the present strong edge in nuclear ballistic throw-weight they consider inconsequential. (Together with Trident II, to enter the fleet in 1989, MX will increase U.S. throw-weight by 55%.)

In its consideration of the MX and Midgetman systems, Congress so far has shown little inclination to ponder cost implications of the two systems. Cost of developing, building, and deploying 100 MX missiles in existing Minuteman III silos is estimated to run about $30 billion. The cost of a force of 1,000 mobile Midgetman missiles has been put at between $45- and $70-billion, depending on the basing mode, according to the Congressional Budget Office (CBO). The goal presently favored calls for launchers capable of withstanding blast overpressure of 30 psi, about three times as much as an Abrams M-60 can take. The launchers would be spread over 12,000 sq. mi. of government-owned land in the West.

But as system costs force themselves into greater prominence, Congress may well find Midgetman less appealing. Because a dispersed mobile system imposes much higher maintenance, security, communication, and control costs, a fixed-base system becomes ever more attractive. (CBO puts the 20-year all-in lifetime cost of the Midgetman at $100 billion, far greater than the lifetime cost of MX.)

A new factor may alter the political climate for MX. Recent small-scale tests by the Air Force Ballistic Missile Office has raised the possibility that the hardness of underground silos can be increased 20 to 40 times over present values, giving them the ability to withstand overpressures as high as 50,000 psi. If tests confirm this, the 100 silos at Warren AFB, Wyo., housing the MX can be superhardened with comparatively "low-tech" civil-engineering techniques at a cost of less than $10 billion.

Superhardness would go far to assuage the anxieties of Congress about the destabilizing nature of MX. USAF experts reckon that, given present ICBM accuracy, the Soviets would have to launch at least six two-megaton warheads in their SS-18 or SS-19 missiles to assure destruction of superhardened silo; only two such warheads are deemed sufficient to disable the softer Minuteman silo.

A two-megaton surface detonation will excavate a crater in rock 0.125 mi. (660 ft) in radius. The radius of the fracture zone will extend 0.25 mi. (1,300 ft) from ground zero. Presumably, hardened silos will be able to survive within the zone of intense fracturing, even though they would be "cratered out" by very near misses. Skeptics will argue that the Soviets can recapture the advantage for the offensive strike merely by restoring to higher-yield warheads on MIRVed ICBMs, or by contracting circular error probabilities (CEPs) to within the crater radius of their existing warheads (as the U.S. will do with the MX and Trident II), or by a combination of both measures.

Of course, a similar argument may be raised against the mobile single-warhead ICBM. Jonathan Rich of the Federation of American Scientists calculates that the Soviets could saturate the 12,000 sq mi. of area devoted to Midgetman by launching 3,000 warheads of 500-kt yield against them with their SS-18 force. Even hardened to 30 psi, only a minimal number of the single-warhead weapons would survive for a second strike. In the absence of a new arms-control agreement, addition of the 10-warhead solid propellant SS-X-24 ICBM now in development, coupled with improvements in CEP, could reduce to "almost zero" the number of surviving Midgetman systems and "counter any potential gains in harder silo construction," according to Rich.

All of this indicates that land-based ICBMs will remain the most vulnerable leg of the strategic triad, no matter what direction the nation pursues. At the same time, however, the strategic cost equation can be driven negative for the other side—force the Soviets to spend more than we do to neutralize a new initiative. In the eyes of the Reagan administration, if that is the best we can hope for with the land-based component of the strategic force, it is far better than "getting run off our own land" by supinely conceding the other follow's advantage. It also offers the further possibility of bankrupting him before the game bankrupts us altogether.

With the election fast approaching, the administration is not inclined to make waves about the potential for reducing the vulnerability of land-based ICBMs. Having succeeded so far in wringing an authorization from Congress for second-year MX production, it prefers to let sleeping dogs lie. But the issue is bound to come to the fore after the election, and Congress will have to make a hard choice about the direction it wants to pursue.

So far, Defense Secretary Weinberger has succeeded not only in committing both the nation and the Congress to a massive defense modernization program but also in protecting the strategic elements of his program from erosion at the expense of the general-purpose forces. As the financial burden becomes increasingly onerous, and Congress finds less and less scope for influencing the buildup, the Hill may be tempted to resort to "disorderly" tactics to make some room in the budget for what it, and not Secretary Weinberger, feels is essential. This will mean bobtailing or throwing overboard some of the ongoing strategic programs. But unlike its response in the recent, highly emotional fight over continued MX funding, the Congress will increasingly be driven by economic rather than political considerations. The shakeout will begin in earnest among the five new strategic nuclear penetrators—the B-1B, MX, Trident II, and two cruise missiles.●

ETSI VENTURE FOLDS

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, on August 1, the sponsors of the ETSI Pipeline project, a proposed coal slurry line from Wyoming to the gulf coast, announced that the project has been terminated. According to ETSI president Paul G. Doran, the decision to terminate is the result of protracted railroad opposition that has brought about costly delays in securing all the necessary permits, rights-of-way and other clearances for the project.

When the Coal Pipeline Act was debated in the House last fall, opponents of the legislation charged that Federal eminent domain authority was not needed. They argued that it was possible for a slurry line to be built using State eminent domain authority, and by bargaining for rights-of-way with individual landowners. These arguments and others carried the day, and the coal slurry bill was defeated, 235 to 180.

The fate of the ETSI pipeline proves that coal slurry pipelines cannot be built without the assistance of Federal eminent domain. The ETSI pipeline company invested more than $130 million, and spent over 10 years trying to obtain rights-of-way for their proposed pipeline.

They were thwarted, however, by long, costly legal battles with the railroads and by their inability to acquire the necessary easements. The railroads forced ETSI to litigate easements over railroad rights-of-way 67 times in the course of 6 years. Each time ETSI prevailed on the merits, but each court action cost thousands of dollars and delayed planning for several months. Finally the delays and mounting costs took their toll, and ETSI was forced to fold its tent.

Sadly, the real losers in the coal slurry wars are not ETSI, or any of the other coal slurry interests, but the consumers of this country. The inability of slurry pipelines to compete for coal traffic means that the railroads are able to control the market. Lack of competition means higher shipping rates, and those costs are passed on to consumers by the captive utilities.

Attached to my statement today is an article from the Oil and Gas Journal, June 11, 1984, that describes the Soviet Union's plans to begin operation of a 155-mile coal slurry line in 1985. The article notes that the Soviet Union believes that during the next decades it may build slurry lines with greater capacity than the rest of the world combined. The Journal reports that Russia has noted that the United States is lagging behind because of right-of-way problems, water user disputes, and railroad opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I am dismayed that American know-how and pipeline technology are being taken advantage of by coal producing countries all over the world, yet we here at home are denied the opportunity to benefit from slurry. I continue to believe that coal slurry pipelines should be given the opportunity to prove themselves in a competitive market.

The article follows:

U.S.S.R. PLANS COAL SLURRY PIPELINES

The Soviet Union plans to place the world's "most technologically advanced" coal slurry pipeline in operation during 1985.

About 155 miles long, the 16 in. "experimental/commercial" line will extend from an open pit mine at Byelovo in western Siberia's Kuznets coal basin to an electrical power generating plant at Novosibirsk.

Design capacity is 4.3 million tons of coal/year.

If successful, this "thick slurry" project will be followed in the 1990s by a 1,500 mile pipeline carrying 25 million metric tons/year of coal from Kuznets basin mines to power plants in the Ural Mountain area.

Ultimate plans call for slurry pipelines to transport Siberian coal to the Moscow region, a distance of 2,500 miles.

The U.S.S.R. estimates that a 56 in. slurry pipeline could carry 100 million tons/year of Kuznets coal to the European sector of the country.

The Soviet Union believes that during the next several decades it may build coal slurry pipelines with capacity greater than the rest of the world combined. It notes that the U.S., with its right-of-way problems, water user disputes, and railroad opposition, lags far behind the forecast mileage of coal slurry pipeline construction.

Soviet economists estimate that long distance slurry pipelines built with advanced technology will be able to transport coal at half the cost of railroads. They say capital outlays and operating expenses will be reduced, and only 10 percent as many operating personnel will be required.

THICK SLURRY

Key feature of the Byelovo-Novosibirsky pipeline will be the extreme thickness of the slurry. Coal content will be 60-70 percent, and it's proposed that the slurry be burned at the power plant without preliminary dewatering.

Elimination of dewatering equipment alone will reduce capital investment for the project by an estimated 10-15 percent.

Size of the finely ground coal in the Byelovo slurry will be "less than 0.2 mm."

According to one Soviet report, this slurry "will be as thick as porridge in which a spoon can stand upright." Another source, however, compares the thick slurry's viscosity with that of heavy fuel oil.

With such concentration, the Soviets say, "this slurry acquires viscous/plastic properties, doesn't flow readily, and can be transported by pipeline only when treated with special reagents." The reagents, or surfactants, were not specified.

Besides reducing water consumption, the thick slurry method of pipelining coal is said by the Soviets to increase the suspension's stability and to simplify its storage properties.

Ekonomicheskaya Gazeta emphasized that the quality of construction and skill in experimental operation of the Byelovo-Novosibirsk slurry pipeline will determine whether and how soon the Soviets will initiate long distance, large capacity projects.

Pipe and welding equipment has been delivered to points along the Byelovo-Novosibirsk route. Laying of the pipe, which will be buried at an average depth of 2 m, is slated for completion by yearend.

SOME DELAYS

Delays have been encountered in building slurry preparation facilities at Byelovo and combustion equipment at the Novosibirsk power plant.

The biggest problem is that much of the new pipeline's equipment must be specially designed. Because of the slurry's viscosity and abrasiveness, pumps, controls, and other equipment employed on oil and gas pipelines can't be used on the Byelovo-Novosibirsk project without extensive modification.

Ekonomicheskaya Gazeta said Soviet manufacturers are "extremely unwilling" to modernize and modify equipment that is now in volume production to meet the needs of one relatively small project.

"Thus the ministry of heavy machine building and its Uralmash factory have been slow in adapting the U8-6MA2 drilling pump for operation in slurry transportation. They have even tried to propose that their mass produced pumps be employed, although tests show them unsuited for moving thick slurry."

The Byelovo-Novosibirsk pipeline will require 24 automated electric pumping units using modernized U8-6MA2 pumps. The units will be located at Byelovo and two intermediate pump stations.

The U.S.S.R. has had no experience with long distance slurry pipelines or commercial transportation of thick coal slurry. As recently as late 1982, Soviet reports indicated that the water-oil ratio in the Byelovo-Novosibirsk pipeline's slurry would be about 1:1.

Two Soviet coal slurry lines operating in the Kuznets basin are only 6-7 miles long. Ratio of coal to water is 1:7 and 1:12, and the size of coal transported is as large as 100 mm.

This, the Soviets concede, sharply reduces coal throughput and increases abrasive wear of the pipeline.

OTHER LINES STUDIED

Prior to deciding on the thick slurry method of moving coal through the Byelovo-Novosibirsk pipeline, the Soviets studied slurry pipeline technology and proposed advances in the U.S., West Germany, France, and Italy. Special study was made of Arizona's 273 mile Black Mesa coal slurry pipeline, which has operated since 1970 and handles about 5 million tons/year of coal.

It would have been easy, the Soviet newspaper Ekonomicheskaya Gazeta declared, to follow the proven and relatively simple Black Mesa method of coal slurry transportation. But it said, "Substantial shortcomings inherent in this technological scheme forced us to look for a new solution."

The Soviets concede that the Black Mesa slurry pipeline has achieved a very high degree of reliability. But with American technology, Ekonomicheskaya Gazeta pointed out, it's necessary to dewater the coal before combustion.

"The thin concentration of coal in the water requires increased water consumption (about 1 cu m/ton of transported coal). It's also difficult to regulate the pipeline's productivity," the newspaper said.

"Meanwhile, dewatering the coal to bring its water content down to 25-30 percent before delivery to the combustion chamber involves solution of a host of complex technical problems, development of special equipment, and additional energy expenditure. The problem of cleaning and using the water in the pipeline slurry is far from simple."

METHANOL/COAL SLURRY

While concentrating its efforts on transporting thick water/coal slurry, the U.S.S.R. also has expressed interest in a methanol/coal mixture.

The official government newspaper Izvestia said preliminary studies show that methanol can be separated easily from coal after transportation.

"It would thus be possible to move two energy bearing materials together—coal and methanol, which is a chemical raw material as well as a remarkable motor fuel additive."●

TRIBUTE TO THE FREE SONS OF ISRAEL

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, on October 13 of this year the Free Sons of Israel will begin a week of activity celebrating their 135th anniversary. At this time I would like to pay tribute to this fine organization.

Founded in 1849, the Free Sons of Israel is the oldest national Jewish fraternal benefit order in the United States. The Free Sons Order was founded by a small group of Jews who desired to form a close brotherhood of Jews in America, dedicated to the principles of fraternity, friendship, and equality. Throughout its 135-year history the Free Sons of Israel have stood for progress and understanding, and they have adapted well to the tests of time and change. They have provided a strong and unwavering voice for the basic human rights of all individuals—especially those Jews in the Soviet Union who continue to be oppressed and denied even the most basic of human rights. Throughout their long history the Free Sons of Israel have remained committed to the principles of equality, freedom, and justice.

The Free Sons of Israel consist of subordinate lodges located throughout the United States, including three lodges in my home State of New York. Situated in New York City, Westchester County and Nassau County, the Free Sons of Israel has grown into an important organizational network serving the needs and interests of the Jewish community in New York. The Free Sons provide a wide range of programs, benefits and activities for its members, including scholarship programs for young members, an insurance fund, credit union, and various sports activities.

The Free Sons have been a strong supporter of the State of Israel, our staunchest ally in the Middle East. The Free Sons have contributed greatly to the political, cultural, and economic development of Israel through contributions to the United Jewish Appeal and investments in State of Israel bonds.

Through its many foundation funds the Free Sons of Israel have distributed over a half million dollars to affiliates throughout the country. Activities of the foundation fund range from homes for senior citizens, convalescent homes, and summer camps for needy children, to active participation with charitable organizations, and distribution of toys for handicapped children.

Through its social action committee, the Free Sons of Israel have been able to act as a watchdog for all violations of human rights throughout the world—especially in the Soviet Union where many Jews continue to be oppressed by the Soviet Government. The Free Sons have continually voiced their strong opposition to all forms of Soviet antisemitism or curtailment of Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union. They have been an active and strong force in the fight against antisemitism and bigotry in this country, and have long advocated political action to deal with issues relating to the Jewish community in the United States.

For the past 135 years, the Free Sons of Israel have been an outstanding organization, one not afraid to speak out on behalf of the oppressed and down-trodden people of the world. Through their activities and growth they have provided their membership with many important services had have maintained a sense of fraternity and belonging for the Jewish community of the United States. They have been a strong supporter of the democratic State of Israel and have provided a strong and powerful voice to oppose continued human rights violations against Soviet Jews and other oppressed groups. The Free Sons of Israel remain an organization dedicated to peace, equality, and freedom for all people, as well as fraternity, equality, and brotherhood among the Jewish community of this country. Throughout its 135 years of service and activity the Free Sons of Israel have added greatly to the growth and vitality of the American Jewish community, a community which has made an important contribution to this country's rich immigrant heritage.●

PLIGHT OF BALTIMORE APPALACHIANS

HON. PARREN J. MITCHELL

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, in these hectic and complex times it is easy to isolate ourselves from the problems of those less fortunate than ourselves. I think it is important, however, that we take time out of our busy schedules to concern ourselves with these persons.

In the north central section of Baltimore, there is a populace consisting of 1,100 households of overlooked, disparate citizens. They are called Appalachians. Appalachians are displaced mountain people who have been forced to live in the city to survive.

In reading the following article, and two others which will run on consecutive days, I think you will gain some insight into the plight of the Appalachians. These articles were written by Colman McCarthy and appeared in the Washington Post on June 16, 17 and 19, 1984.

The following is the text of the first article as it appeared in the Post:

BALTIMORE.—Instinctive optimism has always marked the collective character of Appalachians, especially the displaced ones trapped in the pessimism of an alien city and collapsing economy. In Baltimore's Remington neighborhood, where memories of life in the mountains run as deep as yearnings to get on a Greyhound and go back home for at least a weekend, optimism is on display at the Community Survival Center.

Since 1977, it has been laboriously struggling to organize the local poor white community to fight against its powerlessness. A food cooperative, a home-improvement program, evening adult-education classes, counseling for unmarried mothers, medical clinics and dances have been among the successes. No federal money supports the center's programs.

The support comes from self-sacrifice, beginning with the 28-year-old director who lives in a garret at the center and takes a salary of $60 a month. His wealth is in his self-reliance and independence, which is Remington's rich vein, too. To outsiders, that doesn't look like much. From within, it has meant nearly everything. Hard times have been survived in the mountains. They will be survived here.

The center is a half-block from a fumy intersection in the north central part of the city. An Exxon station is across the street. Blocks away is an abandoned building, a gateway to the homeless zone. The center is a trusted force because its origins are local.

Now well-meaning government agency arrived to proclaim its official pity on "urban hillbillies" by announcing that the solution to their problems was a community center. What the local people chose to call their operation—a survival center, because surviving is literally the crisis—suggests that only neighborhood citizens could understand their own needs.

A few weeks ago during the Maryland Democratic presidential primary, campaign workers for one of the candidates approached the center's director: Would a visit by the candidate be welcomed? "Our feeling," he recalls, "was that if he wanted to come in and listen to people in the community and find out our concerns and worries and do that kind of work, then we would be more than happy to have him. We would welcome any candidate, I don't care who he is. But we aren't going to be here for a media event. Not when we are overlooked the rest of the time." None of the three Democratic candidates came to Remington.

It may have been just as well. Suspicion of outlanders is part of the Appalachian identity. Distrustfulness is the natural defense after decades of betrayals by adversative coal and timber companies who took the wealth of the hills in a style of rape-and-run exploitation seen in no other part of the country. The region has also seen an inflow of problem-solving experts who, as a mountaineer once described them, "pop in, pop off and pop out."

In contrast to the suspicion of strangers, Appalachians in urban sites like the Remington neighborhood are known to be unbelievably kind and openhearted to each other. People come to the Survival Center as much to ask what they can contribute to the place as to how they can benefit from the programs. Children are often the most generous. Their inbred kindness is the last cultural legacy they have received from the Applachia their parents left behind.

Remington is a neighborhood of 1,100 households. Nationally no accurate figure is available on the number of mountain people living in cities. Many drop out. They were never eligible for benefits like food stamps or would rather go hungry than take welfare and lose self-esteem. Many subsist in the underground economy. The Appalachian Regional Commission has no programs specifically designed for urban mountaineer communities. The commission, which the Reagan administration has unsuccessfully tired to kill, is denied adequate funds to serve even rural Appalachians. It, too, is practiced in the ways of survival.

In cities like Detroit, Pittsburgh and Cleveland, displaced Appalachians have organized their self-reliance into operations similar to the Community Survival Center in Baltimore. For much of the nation, urban poor whites from the mountains are pariahs. Among themselves, the truer reality prevails. These are generous, gentle people who care for their own, even when that means sharing what little they own.●

BISHOP ABRAMOWICZ RECEIVES THE MINUTEMAN OF THE YEAR AWARD

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, on June 22, Bishop Alfred Abramowicz was awarded the Stanley Piekarz Minuteman of the Year Award in the Fifth Congressional District of Illinois. The Minuteman of the Year Award is presented to the person or persons who exhibit the honored traits and qualities that best serve the needs of the country, State, and community.

Bishop Abramowicz has played an integral role in a number of humanitarian programs throughout the community, most notably the food and medical supply drive for the citizens of Poland. He is also serving on a commission which is investigating the refugee problems in Southeast Asia and Africa.

The earnest efforts and willingness of Bishop Abramowicz to take such an active role in humanitarian deeds is an inspiration to all who know him. I was extremely proud to award the Stanley Piekarz Minuteman of the Year Award to Bishop Abramowicz.

I know I join with the residents of the Fifth Congressional District in paying tribute to Bishop Abramowicz for his work, and I would like to introduce into today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a newspaper article honoring Bishop Abramowicz upon his receipt of the Stanley Piekarz Minuteman of the Year Award.

[From the Midway Sentinel, June 1984]

BISHOP ABRAMOWICZ AND JOHN HZYNY TO BE HONORED AT LUNCHEON

Congressman William O. Lipinski has announced that Bishop Alfred Abramowicz and John Hzyny will be honored at this year's Patriot of the Year Luncheon to be held at 12 noon on June 22 at the Rhine V.F.W. Post, 5858 Archer Ave.

According to Lipinski, this luncheon will serve to recognize and honor two outstanding individuals for their dedication and devotion to community, civic and humanitarian endeavors.

Two distinct and coveted awards will be presented at this year's luncheon. John Hzyny, as a resident of the 23rd Ward community, will receive the "Nick Fryziuk Patriot of the Year Award" while Bishop Abramowicz will be honored with the "Stanley Piekarz Minuteman of the Year Award."

Bishop Abramowicz who was ordained a priest in 1943 and named Auxiliary Bishop of Chicago in 1968 has played an integral role in the number of humanitarian programs throughout the community, most notably the food and medical supply drive for the citizens of Poland. He is also co-chairman for the National Committee of the "National Czestochowa Trust Appeal" and is currently serving on a commission investigating the refugee problems in Thailand and Africa.

John Hzyny, who is a life long resident of the Southwest side, has been an active member of the Midway Kiwanis Club, Lech Walesa Triangle Committee, Vittum Park Civic League and various other neighborhood organizations. During the past year, Johnny, as chairman of the "Have a Heart for Keith" committee, has been raising funds to help defray the costs of heart transplant needed by Keith Stanislawski, a 12 year old Chicago Lawn boy who is suffering from cardiac myopathy, a virus that causes deterioration of the heart muscles. Keith recently received his new heart on May 23 and is currently recovering in a Pittsburgh hospital.

Anyone interested in attending the awards luncheon is asked to call Jim Laski at 767-1720 no later than June 19. The price of the luncheon is $8 and can be paid in advance or at the door.●

A POISONOUS DELAY

HON. JOSEPH G. MINISH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. MINISH. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow will be an important legislative day for New Jerseyans and many other Americans who live next door to or on top of abandoned toxic waste dumps.

Our colleagues will have an opportunity to consider timely legislation authored by Mr. FLORIO of New Jersey. His bill, H.R. 5640, seeks to strengthen and reauthorize the Superfund Program to clean up abandoned hazardous waste sites throughout America.

Currently there are more than 17,000 known hazardous waste sites throughout the country. Many estimate the actual number to be as high as 22,000 and no State is immune from their threat.

In New Jersey, we have 85 of the most dangerous of these abandoned dumps and these dumps continue to pollute our drinking water and threaten the well-being of our communities.

Last Friday, in an editorial, the Record of Bergen County, NJ, illustrated very effectively the concern of neighbors who live near the Kin-Buc landfill in Edison, NJ—one of the most notorious toxic waste dumps. As the editorial appropriately points out, all of us who have worked so hard to reauthorize Superfund this year have been trying to light fires under the administration and EPA.

Delay in reauthorizing the Federal Superfund is prolonging the time neighbors of the Kin-Buc landfill and millions of other Americans must live in fear of tainted air and drinking water.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be a strong supporter and cosponsor of this legislation and I commend the editorial to the attention of our colleagues. While study is good, we've already squandered far more time than we can afford. We must act now to ensure a strong Superfund Program.

A POISONOUS DELAY

The neighbors of Kin-Buc landfill in Edison, perhaps the most notorious of New Jersey's 85 dangerous toxic-waste dumps, must be grinding their teeth in frustration over the partisan tugs-of-war in Washington these days. The delay in re-authorizing the federal "Superfund" for toxic-waste clean-up is prolonging the time they and millions of other Americans must live in fear of tainted air and drinking water.

The Environmental Protection Agency, whose job it is to identify and clean up those dumps, was given the $1.6-billion Superfund for that purpose in 1980. Since then, the EPA has found 552 hazardous sites and expects that the number will more than double by the end of the year. So far, though, it has completed work on only six. The delay is due partly to ineptitude and deliberate foot-dragging by former EPA executives Anne Burford and Rita Lavelle, partly to turf struggles in Congress.

But time is running out. The act expires in October, Rep. James Florio of Camden County, who has spent many months trying to light fires under the EPA, wants Congress to adopt a new Superfund bill before the election. He and a number of environmental groups reason that President Reagan wouldn't dare veto the bill before election, but might do so afterward.

Mr. Florio has asked Congress to appropriate a staggering $9 billion over the next five years. The chemical industry supports the bill but says it cannot afford more than $4.2 billion. Superfund appropriations are raised from taxes on chemical and petrochemical firms; Mr. Florio would extend that liability to those who dispose of toxic wastes as well, which seems fair enough. Mr. Reagan wants to delay a funding decision until December—timing that certainly has a partisan ring to it.

The president says he supports more money for the Superfund but argues that further study should be undertaken before the clean-up program is reauthorized. Action is what's needed, not study. If Mr. Reagan is sincere, he should be talking to his adherents in Congress. Once the partisan nonsense is out of the way, there remains only the matter of how much new money we can afford to spend on correcting the public-health menaces. We've already squandered far more time than we can afford.●

TRANSFER OF F-5 AIRCRAFT TO GREECE AND TURKEY

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced a resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the President should not increase the number of F-5 fighter aircraft to be transferred to Turkey as a means of expressing U.S. displeasure with recent actions of the Greek Government.

A few weeks ago, we learned that the administration was considering blocking the transfer of some F-5 fighter aircraft from Norway to Greece. In addition, it was suggested that those planes might be awarded to Turkey instead. Several factors were said to be influencing the administration's thinking: A speech made by Prime Minister Papandreou last May, the release by the Greek Government of a suspected terrorist, and a general feeling that the Greek Government was not cooperating with U.S. efforts to combat terrorism and stabilize the region.

At this point, no decision has been made on the transfer. And we have every reason to believe that the decision is following a normal process within the State and Defense Departments.

I hope that the questions surrounding our current relations with Greece are not needlessly confused by infusing the element of Turkish-Greek relations into the process. If the administration should decide not to allow the transfer of the planes to Greece, there is no need to allow those planes to go to Turkey. If we do that, what was simply a problem between two NATO partners becomes even more entangled. I would hope that the membership of Greece and Turkey in the NATO alliance would serve as a means of resolving their differences. If we award any additional planes to Turkey, it is certain that relations between Greece and Turkey will be exacerbated and NATO will become involved in a manner that is not necessary. Finally, I do not believe that the United States should fuel an arms race in the Aegean region.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

H. CON. RES. —

Whereas the Government of Norway has requested United States permission pursuant to the Arms Export Control Act to transfer 16 United States-origin F5 aircraft to other countries;

Whereas Greece and Turkey are among the countries being considered as recipients of those aircraft;

Whereas while the United States would send a strong message to Greece concerning the current state of Greek-United States relations by denying Greece permission to receive any F5 aircraft from Norway, that message should not include granting Turkey permission to receive the aircraft that would have otherwise gone to Greece;

Whereas the United States goal of encouraging Greece to cooperate more closely with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization is important and ought not to be jeopardized by other issues affecting our relations with Greece and increased military support for Turkey;

Whereas both Greece and Turkey are our partners in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and their adherence to the alliance ought to be a means of resolving their differences, and not to exacerbate them; and

Whereas the United States ought not to fuel an arms race in the Aegean region: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that, in considering the pending request by the Government of Norway for permission to transfer United States-origin F5 aircraft to other countries, the President should not increase the number of aircraft approved for transfer to Turkey as a means of punishing Greece or showing United States displeasure with Greece.●

THERE MUST BE NO "DAY"

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share the moving and dramatic experience of Mr. Stephen M. Osborn who was present at the thermonuclear tests at Bikini in 1956. His essay "There Must Be No 'Day'" eloquently describes the horrendous impact of nuclear weapons.

THERE MUST BE NO "DAY"

(By Stephen M. Osborn)

Where does one begin in responding to The Day After? For me, it can have many beginnings. I remember, as a seven or eight year old boy, looking with awe at the Bikini battered ships at the Bremerton Navy Yard. Then, I grew up in the cold war rhetoric of the late forties and fifties.

In 1956, as a young navy man, I was at the thermonuclear tests at Bikini, code named, Operation Redwing. The first bomb exploded was, we were told, a twenty megaton plus thermonuclear device, to be exploded at an altitude of twenty thousand feet. Our observation point was to be aboard ship at a distance of thirty miles from ground zero. That is a long way, about as far as the doctor was from Kansas City when the first bomb went off in the movie. It is not far enough.

Most of the crew was ranged on deck, wearing blast goggles and facing aft, away from the blast. I was not on deck as there were not enough goggles to go around. Instead, I picked a spot in a passageway about thirty feet forward of a light well. Any light coming in would have to come from the direction away from the blast, down about a twenty foot well, then penetrate the passageway. I had my back to the well. During the final countdown, I wrapped both arms across my eyes, one over the other. I could hear the voice on the ships intercom, 5, 4, 3, 2, 1, Zero.

Suddenly, I could see light, right through my arms! The heat was intense, as though I had my back to an opened furnace door. The silence was deafening. After what seemed like minutes, but was probably a few seconds, the light began to fade. As it grew dark, I eased one arm away from the other and the light was back, but again fading. When it was gone, I moved my other arm. The light through my clenched eyelids was painful, but it continued to fade and I gradually opened my eyes and began backing toward the light well. As the light continued to decrease, it finally got to the point where I could squint up the light well at the sky. The light was brilliant, the sky an intense blue. I climbed out of the well and peeked forward around the shelter of the conning tower, directly at the cloud and the now fading fireball.

My first impression was of a weird beauty. The cloud was sharply defined like a thunderhead and had a fluorescent, amethyst colored glow, which tinged toward a dark red. It is impossible to communicate the scale of the cloud. We were thirty miles away, yet the feeling was similar to when one stands beneath a huge redwood, watching the trunk taper away above you, to be surmounted by a crown of speading branches far overhead. At thirty miles, it was as though we were right at the base of the cloud looking up, rather than out, at it.

We stood there in the silence, looking at the cloud and quietly commenting on the colors. On the right side, close to the cloud, we could see two bright, stationary lights. They were visible for a short while, then they faded.

Over two minutes had passed, then the voice on the intercom began the countdown for the shock wave. 5, 4, 3, 2, 1, Zero. The pressure wave at that distance was not violent; there was an increase of about one atmosphere, enough to make your ears pop; the sound was a long low rumble lasting about thirty seconds.

The sun began to rise, lighting the outside of the cloud and overpowering the internal glow. The cloud was identifiable for most of the day, with the top being slowly torn to rags by the jet stream.

We steamed back to the atoll, rather sobered by the experience. We were quite curious about the mysterious lights we saw beside the cloud. About a week or so after the shot, I was speaking to one of the scientists that had been aboard. He said they also had been puzzled by the appearance of the lights. They finally concluded that what we saw were two bright stars, essentially as we would have seen them from outer space. Apparently, the heat of the explosion was so great that it literally burned away the atmosphere around the fireball. As soon as the temperature dropped sufficiently, the air collapsed back around the envelope, the starlight was attenuated and disappeared.

We spent, if memory serves, about six months at Bikini. Every so often, we would steam out for a shot. Frequently, we would go out, muster on deck in the predawn, the countdown would proceed, then, "The shot for today has been cancelled," and we would steam back to the anchorage, to try again the next morning. This might go on for ten days or more before they would finally set it off.

Once, the wind shifted after a shot and we were battened below in the stifling heat while the ship tried to run from under the fallout. Personnel that had to go topside were decontaminated and their clothes were taken for disposal. After a couple of days, we headed for Kwajalein, some four hundred miles away, until it was safe to return to the atoll.

Following one, either underwater or surface burst, the clean up crews told of fish falling out of the coconut palms. The swimming float that had been anchored with huge concrete blocks in the lagoon was found floating at sea. Two of the blocks were found in the middle of the island.

The final shot of the series found us eighteen miles from ground zero. The heat was incredible, though this was a much smaller bomb, possibly a tactical warhead. The shock wave jolted the whole ship backwards several inches and felt as if your whole body was struck with a sledge hammer. The sound was one sharp crack, as though a rifle or firecracker was fired right next to your ear.

After a few days spent dismantling the establishment on Nan Island, Bikini Atoll, we steamed for home.

In later years, I had nightmares of the bombs going off, where I would be standing, crying, realizing that some SOB had finally pushed the button and it was the end of all things. I would wake up covered with sweat, pulse racing and face wet with tears. Gradually, that dream receded, until I saw the rockets blasting out of their silos in The Day After. I was sitting with my arm around my son's shoulder. Suddenly, I began to shake and my eyes filled with tears. Each time another took off, it got worse. I knew what was going to happen, I had been there!

Since the program, it has been continually on my mind. Watching that reptilian Buckley, "Megadeath" Scowcroft and Kissinger sit there speaking in Orwellian doublethink, explaining that more is less and death is peacekeeping made me wonder how long these aging, frustrated cowboys are going to be allowed to determine how much youth and innocence is to die for this "ism" or that one. Weisel, Sagan and even McNamara made sense. This is one fragile green and blue planet.

Buckley and company brought to mind the lectures we got from some Bircher neighbors when taking our children trick-or-treating. We shouldn't trick-or-treat for UNICEF because UNICEF gave milk to "Commie babies!"

There are no commie babies, or free world babies. There are just babies and children and youths and adults, all with their hopes and dreams. The man in the street in Moscow, London, Paris or Athens is no different from the one in New York or in Mill Valley. We are all frightened and we all simply wish to be left in peace. The European and the Russian may want it more, because they have been overrun by war at least twice this century. They know what war on the home front means, something no American has suffered on the mainland since the civil war.

Every man, woman, and child on this planet must let his government and political leaders know that nuclear terror must cease. It is no longer a viable alternative, if it ever was. The odds of a mistake are far too great and there is no way to retrieve the error once an attack/counter-attack has been launched.

By virtue of our alleged intelligence, we have assumed stewardship of this planet and all of the creatures upon it. We have shown great callousness and ignorance in the exploitation of earth's natural resources, the casual dumping of toxic wastes and the wholesale slaughter of entire species. With wisdom and patience, some of these blunders can be retrieved, but with the development of nuclear power, we have met our destroyer, one way or the other, if we do not call a halt to it. We cannot dispose of spent fuel or refining waste in a safe manner. The cancer and birth deformation rate has risen enormously since we began using it, there is no defense against nuclear attack or terrorism and there have been few signs of sanity or good judgment among those entrusted to do our thinking for us. Papers discussing an acceptable number of megadeaths in a nuclear exchange are not of strategic value, they are obscene, visible manifestation of insanity and immorality.

Mankind has always had a tendency for its technology to outstrip its oral growth. It is time we begin to slow down the technical race and begin to think, not of what is expedient, or will show the greatest short term profit, but what will benefit the planet and ourselves in the long run. What kind of agriculture will leave the land fertile and productive for a thousand years or more? What processes can be used that will leave only biodegradable wastes? Does society's existence depend on an endless flow of gadgets and novelties, designed to fall apart almost immediately? Must everything be designed to wear out in two or three years? Is it possible to recycle our mineral resources rather than continually mining more and allowing worn out products to decay, or simply rust in storage? Can't we produce crops and see that they are distributed rather than be stored to rot? Why don't we make a major effort to harness and use wind and solar energy for power and make a greater effort to reduce energy needs?

Let us pledge to make a start by informing all world leaders that nuclear war is out. The people of this planet will take no more of fear and terror.

Then, with this as a starting point, let us, as stewards of a fragile planet, begin the process of healing and growing, individually and as a species, to the point where all of this will seem a horrible, impossible nightmare. A lesson to be forever remembered, but never repeated. It is up to us.●

SUPPORT FOR THREE CRIME BILLS

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I want to express my support for three important crime bills which passed the House on Monday, July 30. While these bills are not directed solely to drug abuse problems, I believe they will have a positive impact in America's continuing effort to reduce drug trafficking and increase the penalties on people who traffic in narcotics.

H.R. 5846, the Criminal Fine Enforcement Act of 1984, would make criminal fines more severe and thereby encourage their more frequent use as an alternative to, or in addition to, imprisonment. Under H.R. 5846, a drug dealer, for example, could be fined up to the greater of $250,000 or twice the amount of money made by the dealer as a result of the crime. This provision will reduce the economic incentive for drug crimes. The bill also would make it a criminal offense for a convicted defendant willfully to fail to pay a fine and contains procedural reforms designed to make it easier for the Government to collect criminal fines.

H.R. 5910 would make it a criminal offense to introduce or possess contraband in Federal prisons. Included within the definition of contraband are narcotic drugs, LSD, or PCP—Angeldust—and other controlled substances. Violations involving narcotics, LSD, and PCP would be punishable by a maximum fine of $250,000 and 5 years imprisonment. Violations involving other controlled substances would be subject to a fine of up to $25,000 and a maximum prison term of 1 year.

H.R. 5919 is designed to facilitate solving of complicated money laundering schemes involving foreign banks. The purpose of the bill is to make foreign-kept business records more readily admissible into evidence in criminal trials in U.S. courts and to extend statute of limitations and Speedy Trial Act deadlines when prosecutors must try to obtain financial records from banks located in foreign countries.

Drug trafficking generates huge sums of cash that must be laundered. Frequently, drug criminals use offshore banks to wash the proceeds of their illicit activities. H.R. 5919 should help Federal prosecutors obtain the evidence they need to secure convictions against major drug traffickers and financiers.

These bills, by themselves, will not bring the serious narcotics problem confronting our Nation under control. However, they should provide law enforcement personnel with useful new tools to utilize in their continuing battle against drug traffickers. I commend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS] for bringing these measures to the floor.●

DISPOSAL OF SAND AND GRAVEL ON FEDERAL LANDS

HON. DAN MARRIOTT

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. MARRIOTT. Mr. Speaker, the bill I am introducing today in behalf of myself and my Utah colleagues would allow the Bureau of Land Management to dispose of sand and gravel deposits found on unpatented mining claims located on Federal lands administered by that agency.

The Bureau of Land Management is presently prevented from disposing of sand and gravel materials on unpatented mining claims because of a legal interpretation by the Department of Interior which denies such discretion to local BLM land managers. Under this interpretation, sand and gravel deposits cannot be sold, removed, or displaced even when a mining claimholder consents to such removal.

Utah provides a prime example of the problem presented. With numerous speculative mining claims blanketing southern Utah, local communities find themselves with no legal way to obtain common sand and gravel for road construction or other basic construction activities. Of course, not all of the mining claims in southern Utah are speculative; many support viable, ongoing mineral development. Yet, in the Moab Utah district of BLM alone, they are nearly 120,000 mining claims covering the landscape. If even a fraction of the anticipated natural resource development in southern Utah which could occur, does occur, then the pressure to utilize these sand and gravel resources will be overwhelming and without a change in the law, or at least in the interpretation of the law, sand and gravel will simply become a commodity available for a limited few.

I mention the interpretation of law because of the fact that the U.S. Forest Service is presently, and has been for some time, allowing the disposal of sand and gravel on national forests with the consent of the mining claimant under a different interpretation of the same statute—31 U.S.C. 612. From nearly all accounts, this system of disposal works very smoothly in national forests and protects the rights of mining claimants.

This bill would simply clarify that "mineral material surface resources" are eligible to be disposed of by all Federal land managers. It would also protect mining claimants by assuring just compensation for any sand and gravel which they may need but which may have been previously disposed of under this authority.

I am confident that with this simple clarification of current law, the people of Utah and other Western States will benefit by gaining access to a common resource on BLM administered lands which is now denied them.

I urge my colleagues to support passage of the bill.●

THE RIGHTS OF BLIND VENDORS IN THE RANDOLPH-SHEPPARD PROGRAM

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I know my colleagues will want to join me in saluting a recent court decision that affects the rights of blind vendors in the Federal Randolph-Sheppard Program.

U.S. district court judge, Thomas Curran has granted an injunction that will allow Martin B. Howe of Milwaukee, WI, to move his vending operation from the old post office to the new one. Howe is a blind man who had run his newsstand at the old Federal post office for 24 years until it was moved in July. He was then told that he must bid against other vendors for the newsstand business simply because the post office had changed locations. This decision will allow Howe to operate his business at the new location until further administrative appeals are heard.

I would like to submit at this time, a letter that was written by the president of the National Federation of the Blind that concerns this matter. I call your attention to this landmark decision.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF THE BLIND,
Baltimore, MD, July 26, 1984.

Re Howe v. Bolger et. al., Case No. 84-C-843.

Hon. THOMAS J. CURRAN,
U.S. District Judge for the Eastern District of Wisconsin, East Wisconsin Avenue, Milwaukee, WI.

DEAR JUDGE CURRAN: I am writing to express the gratitude and deep appreciation of thousands of blind men and women who are benefited immeasurably by the decision you reached in the above captioned matter. The ruling clearly sets forth a practical and just solution to protect the interests of blind vendors while administrative appeals can be heard. It underscores the due process rights Congress intended for the blind, and in doing so, the decision clarifies for all concerned the status of blind vendors under the law. Accordingly, I respectfully urge that the appropriate steps be taken to cause this decision to be published in the Federal Supplement.

Blind vendors in the Randolph-Sheppard Program are the intended beneficiaries of a system which depends heavily upon the joint, harmonious cooperation of numerous federal and state agencies. But, what should happen to a blind vendor when these governmental entities (each with varying interests) do not agree or act in consort? clarifying this issue for the respective parties of interest in the Randolph-Sheppard Program is the valued contribution of your decision. The procedural due process safeguards in the statute, absent injunctive relief, are not alone sufficient to preserve the interests of the blind when the responsibility agencies arguably fail to work together or to perform their duties.

In our experience as the largest national organization of blind persons in the country, the law (both before and after the 1974 Amendments) has been the subject of real controversy with regard to the right of blind vendors to injunctive relief, and under what circumstances such relief might be granted. Thus, the task or resolving such issues becomes the proper responsibility of the courts. Yet, in the ten years since the latest amendments were enacted, courts have had relatively few opportunities to address this question, leaving a dearth of judicial guidance. This void is not in the interest of the blind vendors, the property managing agencies, the state licensing agencies, or the public served by the Randolph-Sheppard Program. Therefore, publishing your decision would fulfill substantial program needs and interests. Of course, publishing would also serve judicial economy by guiding other courts who may face similar issues in the future.

As you obviously realize by now, the blind vending program is enormously complex. Yet, your depth of understanding in sorting out the issues and organizational relationships is plainly shown in the clear language of the decision. Your labors in this regard have made a major contribution to the orderly and fair administration of this important program for the blind. For this, we thank you.

Respectfully,

KENNETH JERNIGAN,
President.●

A SALUTE TO GOLD MEDALIST JOAN BENOIT

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, in the 23d Olympiad in Los Angeles, competition in the women's events have captured the public's attention in a unique way and I join with all residents of Maine in saluting Joan Benoit of Freeport.

In her spectacular win Sunday, Joan Benoit truly demonstrated that in running with the fastest women marathoners in the world, she was the best. She takes her place in Olympic history as the first gold medalist in this event.

Because Joan Benoit has made Maine her home, training there for her winning marathon performances, Maine residents are her greatest fans and see her win Sunday as one of the States greatest athletic achievements.

Leigh Montville, a Boston Globe columnist, captures well the Benoit spirit in an article I would like to share with my colleagues:

BENOIT IS FIRST IN EVERY WAY

LOS ANGELES.—She looked so small. So very, very small.

When she came down the long and dark tunnel and into the sunshine of the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum she seemed almost to be a child, a precocious child brought into public view. The size of Joan Benoit was the most memorable part of the picture.

Amazing. This tiny person had done such big things.

"I thought . . . I don't know what I thought," her mother, Nancy, said after 27-year-old Joan Benoit of Freeport, Maine, had captured the gold medal yesterday morning in 2 hours, 24 minutes and 52 seconds in the first Olympic marathon for women. "I was just so happy to see her. To pick her out, coming from that tunnel all the way at the end of the Coliseum."

Joan Benoit's white painter's cap had flopped this way and that on her 26-mile trip through the streets and freeways of Southern California to this final 385 yards, giving her the look of a Charlie Brown comic-strip character. Only her no-nonsense expression gave an indication of how she worked, of what she was doing.

No looks. No winks to the crowd. One smile halfway into the race at a Bowdoin College banner. ("That's spelled B-o-w-d-o-i-n," she said. "Not C-o-l-b-y.") All business. She was on her way to a spot in expanded athletic history. First woman. First women's marathon. First.

"I basically just space out when I run," she explained. "So I really wasn't thinking about anything. I just kind of followed the yellow brick road, so to speak."

She ran this race the way she runs on every day of her life. She hammered. She pounded. She moved away from the crowd, taking herself to the dirt roads of Cape Elizabeth, the back roads of Freeport, the after-dinner quiet of the track at Bowdoin. She ran alone.

"I run most of the time by myself," Joan Benoit said. "So I was very comfortable out there by myself."

The race was as easy to describe as a Sunday afternoon drive up-country. She escaped the traffic in the first three miles and ran away from everyone else. Easy as that. The blimp spots on the television and on the big screen at the end of the Coliseum showed her as a solitary speck, led by a couple of motorcycle patrolmen. No one else was in view.

"We brought a little portable television set to watch the race," said her father, Andre, the owner of a Portland department store. "We got caught in traffic, so we watched the start of the race on the bus and in the parking lot. By the time we reached our seats, she was ahead."

She never planned to run the race this way. She simply did it this way. No one else was moving, so she moved and never stopped.

The chewable, smog-filled, dirty air never was a problem. The other runners never were a problem, not one of them. The heat wasn't a problem and the cheering crowd along the course certainly wasn't a problem and her bulky left knee, the one that almost kept her from this event on this day, was perfect.

She was the hard-boiled athlete who perhaps has resided in women for years and years but never before has been released to show what could be done. She was alone and overpowering and free.

"I used to try to discourage her," Andre Benoit said with a pleasant smile. "She was in this running club and every week she would be taking these interminable bus trips to compete. The Country Runners of Bucksport. That was her group.

"They'd go out of state some place for a race on Saturday, then come back on a Sunday. Every weekend, I'd say, 'What are you doing? You're losing all your weekends with this. By the time you're back, the weekend is shot.' I'd say, 'Have some fun.'

"She'd say, 'But this is fun. I love it.' "

The boundaries on women's road running were disappearing as she grew up in Freeport, marathons being opened to both sexes, the stereotype of the frail, open-this-for-me woman being forgotten. Joan Benoit, tomboy sister in a family with three brothers, was there to take advantage. Second-generation marathon woman.

From the time she started running to help recover from a broken leg suffered while skiing, she has been captured by the sport. The competitiveness of it. The personal, intimate quality of it. The sheer, physical joy.

Her father's advice never stopped her. Her different background, so far from the athletic mills of America, running at a college with no scholarships, somehow became an asset instead of a hindrance. Her injuries—surgery on both Achilles tendons, surgery on her knee only 17 days before the Olympic trials—have been only so many more challenges.

"Look at her," a sportswriter from New Orleans said as she came running into the Coliseum and the crowd. "Just look at her. And to think that we spend all this time writing about football players, crying about this thing or that. Baseball players. Is there a player in all of baseball who could run this far, not to mention this fast? Look at her."

She ran one lap to finish her race, removing the painter's cap and letting her face break into a smile only on the backstretch. She finished, walked a few steps, then ran and ran some more. a victory lap with a large American flag stapled to a blue broomstick. An other lap to seek and find her parents in their designated spot at the bottom of Section 28.

The crowd was hers. The momemt was hers, this tiny woman who will be married in November, who does needlepoint and makes jam, who runs long distances as no woman ever has run. She was alone and first.

"What next?" Joan Benoit was asked at the end of her day.

"The blueberries are late this year in Maine," she said, sitting behind a long press-conference table. "If you want to find me in the next week, find a blueberry patch in Maine, 'cause that's where I'm going to be."

MINNESOTA SUPERFUND LAW ENCOURAGES VOLUNTARY CLEANUP OF HAZARDOUS WASTE SITES

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I am encouraged by recent press reports, such as the transcript that follows, documenting the success of victim compensation provisions contained in State Superfund laws. In order for an individual to recover under the Minnesota law, he or she must prove that the person sued produced the hazardous wastes, that the individual was exposed to them, that the individual sustained an injury, and that there is a reasonable likelihood that the chemical exposure contributed to the injury. Apparently, this substitution of strict liability for negligence has convinced company executives and lawyers to move quickly in cleaning up hazardous waste sites.

The example of Minnesota shows why we must act quickly to incorporate a similar victim compensation provision into the Federal Superfund Program. Not only will individuals be provided an avenue of recovery for their injuries, but more importantly, future injuries will be avoided because companies will act to preclude vast potential liability by cleaning up their wastes.

The legislation I have introduced to expand and extend the Superfund Program, H.R. 5640, contains a Federal cause of action which will provide a uniform national standard for people to recover for their injuries. I hope that all members vote in favor of this legislation which will protect our citizens from the tragic consequences of exposure to hazardous wastes.

An excerpt from the radio broadcast detailing the Minnesota experience follows:

[An excerpt from the Pollution of the Great Lakes Series, transcript of part IV, National Public Radio (NPR), "All Things Considered" and "Morning Edition," originally broadcast in March 1984]

REMOVE NEGLIGENCE AND IT WORKS, THE MINNESOTA SOLUTION TO TOXIC WASTE CLEANUP

(Comments by the reporter have not been placed in quotes.)

This is "Morning Edition." I am Bob Edwards. The recent scandal over the Environmental Protection Agency's Superfund programs suggests how difficult it will be to clean up the nation's hazardous waste dumps. If the EPA continues at its current pace, even some of the worst dumps won't be cleaned up until the year 2000. NPR's Daniel Zwerdling reports one state is taking the matter into its own hands. "I am standing on the field that the Environmental Protection Agency called the Number 1 worst toxic waste dump in the entire United States. It's the FMC Corporation's toxic chemical pits, squeezed between the company's naval weapons factory and the railroad tracks in the town of Fidley just outside Minneapolis; but this is not going to be one of those depressing stories about oozing chemical drums, and why won't reckless corporations clean up their mess? Because today there is absolutely nothing bad to say about the FMC toxic dump. Less than a year ago, the FMC Company laid out almost $6 million and cleaned up all the wastes voluntarily, according to Sandra Garderbring, director of the State Police and Control Agency. "It was perhaps the fastest, friendliest, least obsreperous corporate clean-up in history. We negotiated the settlement. They dug the hole, moved the waste and cleaned the place up in something less than 40 days."

What's the secret? Last summer Minnesota enacted a new state Superfund law that puts the federal Superfund law to shame. Sandra Garderbring says that executives at FMC and other companies are so scared of its provisions that they have been moving very quickly to clean up toxic chemical problems around the state. "I think it's been as successful as anyone could have dreamed."

Minnesota decided it had to do something dramatic about its toxic waste problems back in 1980 when the U.S. Congress passed the much-touted national Superfund law. Carter administration officials had made it sound like the law would clean up the nation's toxic waste dumps once and for all, but disappointed state legislators like Dee Long realized the national law would not clean up more than a few of Minnesota's 61 hazardous waste sites, "First of all the funding was insufficient to go anywhere near cleaning up all the problem sites in all the states. It's just a drop in the bucket. And second," Long says, "the federal law didn't have any provisions to compensate individuals who have been hurt by toxic wastes." So Long and her colleagues in the legislature passed their own state version of Superfund. And after a bitter political battle, it became law last July 1.

And here's what makes companies so afraid of the law. It gives citizens more power than ever before to sue companies whose wastes may have hurt them. Under most state laws it's almost impossible to win if you sue a company because you think its toxic wastes have hurt you because you not only have to prove that the chemicals made you sick, yuou also have to prove that the company was negligent. In other words, you have to show that the company dumped its wastes in ways that it knew (or should have known at the time) could hurt people, but under the new Minnesota law you don't have to prove the company was negligent at all. All you have to show is that the company produced the chemical wastes, that you were exposed to them, that you got sick and that medical evidence shows there is a reasonable chance the chemicals contributed to your illness. Even if the company dumped the chemicals 10 years ago in ways that were considered responsible and safe at the time, the Minnesota law says the company is liable today for making you sick.

Sandra Garderbring of the Pollution Control Agency: "The point is that companies choose to engage in certain kinds of business, presumably they make some profit from it or they wouldn't choose to do it, and as a prudent business man you should have been aware that this was the kind of activity that was going to make you liable if an injury was caused."

And no company in Minnesota wants to be vulnerable to that kind of multi-million dollar lawsuit. Take the FMC Corporation. In 1980, the State got a confidential tip over its pollution hotline revealing that the company had dumped thousands of pounds of toxic chemicals in a field next to one of its factories. State tests suggested the poisons were leaking into the Minneapolis water supply. FMC executives started negotiating with state officials trying to agree on how to clean up, but even company executives acknowledged that after hundreds of meetings the negotiations weren't getting very far until the state passed the new Superfund law. Suddenly, says company lawyer William Warren, company executives decided they had better move fast to clean up that toxic dump before those personal injury provisions took effect. "If we hadn't gotten it done before July 1, we would be exposed to liability to third persons for injury or disease or death that would be caused by hazardous waste that came from our facility."

Nobody has actually sued the company yet under the personal injury provisions of the law, but the threat has been potent enough. Since Superfund took effect last year, 10 companies have stepped forward and agreed to clean up dangerous chemical dumps. Just a few weeks ago, for instance, the sperry Corporation, Ford Motor and seven other companies promised the State in writing that they will help clean up a toxic dump site near Minneapolis that community officials have been trying to get cleaned up for five years.

So the state's Superfund law has been good for the public's health. No one in Minnesota disputes that, but the controversial question is how is Superfund affecting business. Ray O'Connell, a lobbyist for the Minnesota Association of Commerce and Industry says he can sum it up in one word. "Catastrophic." Industry groups have bitterly opposed Superfund since the law was first proposed in the legislature. Business executives warned the governor that if they signed it they might be forced to leave the state. "Look", O'Connell says, "businesses don't mind paying special fees as they have to under the new law to help the state clean up toxic dumps." But he says, companies can't afford to live with the law that allows citizens to sue them for millions of dollars over chemicals they dumped years ago. "We don't feel that's fair. Let me give you an analogy. If I were driving say 10 years ago when the speed limit was before, 55 miles an hour, and I was doing 75, and I to be penalized because I did that 75 miles an hour back in 1975 and where with the energy crunch and everything else, they decrease the mileage to 55 miles an hour. In a sense that's the way we sort of look at it."

But now that the Superfund law has been on the books for nine months, the evidence suggests that the corporate threats of leaving have been mainly rhetoric. This is Dick Chapman reporting: "Another major Minnesota employer has announced plans to expand its operations elsewhere. This time it is 3M Company which will locate . . ."

When the multi-national 3M Corporation, the state's biggest employer, announced two months ago that it's building a new facility in Texas instead of Minnesota where the firm is based, business representatives such as O'Connell quickly pointed to the decision as proof that Superfund is driving companies out of the state. After all, the chairman of 3M had led the industry fight against Superfund and 3M is one of the state's biggest generators of hazardous wastes. But 3M's own executives say that they considered 20 different factors before deciding to expand in Texas, factors such as taxes and energy costs and the cost of living.

Russell Sussage, director of environmental regulatory affairs, says Superfund and other environmental laws were only one of those considerations.

"What 3M said is that Minnesota, your business climate, the whole package, the tax climate, the environmental regulation, is anti-business which is not favorable to business growth."

A few weeks ago the Sperry Corporation, another major employer in Minnesota, also announced that it is going to expand out of state, in Colorado, but a Sperry executive told me that the company would have made the same decision even if Superfund never existed. So I called industry representative O'Connell and asked if he could name one company that's left the state because of Superfund. He said he cannot. Still some legislators say they will try to weaken the Superfund law in an effort to make the state's general business climate more attractive. But the political bets are that Superfund will survive in Minnesota. It won't be long, some legislators say, before the rest of the country catches up. A few months ago Massachusetts passed a new toxic waste law a lot like Minnesota's and there is a campaign in the U.S. Congress to change the national Superfund law this year to make it more like the Minnesota law, too. If that happens, there won't be any state in the country where companies can go to get away from tough toxic waste laws."●

DEFENSE: EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS

HON. DENNY SMITH

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Speaker, as a former military officer and as a business executive, I have spent a considerable amount of time during the past few years searching for ways that Congress could ensure that our Nation's military remained strong, but efficient.

In that light, I would like to call my colleagues' attention to a recent article on this subject written by Mr. Stanley A. Weiss, president of Business Executives for National Security, that appeared in the June 1984 issue of the Journal of Defense & Diplomacy.

For those of us in Congress looking for some positive suggestions as to how we might "get more bang for the buck," I highly recommend the following article:

DEFENSE: EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS

(By Stanley A. Weiss)

In recent years the United States has embarked upon a major buildup of arms spending to better meet the myriad threats that face us. Or so we're told. But as a business executive who has looked closely at the way this money is being spent, I think it is a misconception to say that a genuine defense buildup is going on. One major reason is the shortage of sound business principles at the Pentagon.

I look at military spending and see practices that stand business sense on its head. Congress and the military have built a system that rewards bureaucratically administered prices and tries in every imaginable way to block competition on prices and equipment reliability. According to the General Accounting Office, only about 6 percent of all defense contracts are fully competitive.

So we create monopoly contractors, and then we buy in small expensive lots. We permit contractors to declare that their bolts and washers are "trade secrets" to cut off any future competition, and then we allow the Department of Defense to accept such absurd declarations. We have a military acquisition system without checks and balances; a system that never cancels anything, no matter how much costs soar or how poor performance is. It even stretches out the most costly, noncompetitive contracts for 20 years or more.

There are two principles that every successful business executive understands but that have never penetrated the system of military buying:

If you offer anyone a subsidy to produce something, you will get more of it, produced with less efficiency;

If you deal with a monopoly supplier, you will always get a higher price, and you will usually get lower quality.

Yes, this military buying system will give you $435 hammers. Yes, this system will give you $1,000 bolts. These examples are not aberrations. They are the inevitable result of an inherently flawed process. It does no good to outlaw $1,000 bolts unless you overhaul the system that produces them.

The trouble is that the problems are not confined to the weapons systems procurement process. Let's look at readiness. What have we got to show in military readiness after spending over a trillion dollars on defense since 1980? There are indications, even from within the Pentagon, that readiness is down. The best that can be said is that we don't really know whether readiness is up or down. Gen. Charles Gabriel, air force chief of staff, recently told The Washington Post that air force pilots now practice firing one heat-seeking and one radar-seeking missile a year. He saw this as an improvement over the less-than-annual practices of the past. A trillion dollars since 1980, and our pilots get two practice shots a year?

Even when allowing for inflation, spending over twice what we spent in 1957 buys us half as many active ships and half as many active aircraft as it would then. It also buys fewer active army battalions than it would then. Nearly all of this debacle in force structure and unit costs has occurred while the loudest calls for a buildup have been in the air. Unfortunately, as the budget statistics make clear, dollars are heading "north" while quantities head "south". The best description of what is going on is that in the area of conventional weapons we are spending ourselves broke as we unilaterally disarm.

Business generally understands the concept of long-term corporate planning. Does the Department of Defense? The United States has not had a top-to-bottom reassessment of its military strategy in more than 30 years. Two former chairmen of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Maxwell Taylor and Gen. David Jones, have testified before congress that so many missions have been piled on the DOD over the last generation that the United States does not have a military strategy in the usual sense of the term. If we don't have a military strategy, how can we hope to have military spending priorities linked to military strategy priorities?

Even within these proliferating military commitments and missions, we don't budget soundly. To cite only a few of the points GAO has recently noted:

DOD budget projections presented to congress always assume hardware prices will fall in the future when those prices almost always go up;

DOD chronically underestimates how much it will cost to staff and maintain new weapons systems;

DOD plans for future outlays are based on economic models for which there are no historical parallels;

Funds that are supposed to go into planned program growth in existing programs are frequently diverted into new program starts;

When the inevitable budget shortfalls arrive, programs are never cancelled, no matter how costly they are.

If the business executives I represent spent their investors' and stockholders' money like this, we'd not only be broke, we'd be in big trouble with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

I cannot emphasize strongly enough: throwing more money at this fundamentally flawed budgeting process will not buy us a better defense.

We have already started up a large number of tremendously expensive programs without a clear military strategy for their use and without reliable cost projections. Unless we act quickly and decisively, this mismatch between forecasting and reality will continue diverging, involving additional hundreds of billions of dollars. This would plunge the U.S. military of the late 1980s into the greatest procurement and readiness crunch in U.S. history. Quite simply, we won't have an extra trillion to pay for this ominous accumulation of budgeting mistakes.

Business executives need to adopt the stance of a skeptical investor, look at the Department of Defense and ask: Does the "firm" have a clear corporate plan linking goals to resources? Are its products of high quality? Does its financial reporting suggest an organizational integrity that inspires confidence? Does the "firm" adapt successfully to a fast-changing and challenging market?

The "firm" in this case is not one a skeptical investor can walk away from. We are dealing with a function that is essential to the security of a free society. That fact must inspire us to fix what's wrong! Those of us who want to strong defense will increasingly need to demonstrate how defense can be both effective and affordable.

Here are some questions that we as business executives should be thinking about:

Why are the defense "lines" diverging: Why do more and more dollars buy fewer and fewer goods?

Are we pursuing a conservative investment strategy that will provide us with the necessary long-term stability in the force structure? Is the pace of modernization sustainable over time?

Do we have a clear, easy-to-implement definition of readiness? How can we better align all the parts of the Department of Defense to work toward a goal of improved readiness?

Not all private-sector experience translates directly into the management of defense activities. But when conservative Republican senators tell reporters that the Pentagon is "rotten with bad management," and when the DOD and the executive branch so ignore the tide of congressional complaints to the point that congress moves ever closer to seizing its blunt instrument of budget authority, someone had better force the DOD to take a hard look at reality.

Stunned by multibillion dollar weapons duds, congress last year directed the DOD to set up an independent office of testing and evaluation. The Pentagon has been dragging its feet in complying. A permanent director of this office should be appointed forthwith, and the office should get its important mission under way.

Congress was also irritated with the amount of "get well" money that was being paid out for poorly performing equipment, so it ordered the DOD to get warranties on its purchases. The Pentagon reacted by trying to slip a repeal of the law into a supplemental appropriations request. The navy, to its credit, is supporting warranties. The rest of the DOD needs to shape up.

In the wake of a barrage of scandals concerning the overcharging for spare parts, congress has finally decided that it can't pass laws against $435 hammers without addressing the system that produces them. Congress is now trying to reform military procurement—with no help from the Defense Department. Even the most responsible and carefully drawn procurement reform bills are drawing a steady stream of Pentagon naysayers, with the message that such reform isn't needed and/or can't be done. Congress itself has long been a part of the procurement problem; the DOD is missing an important opportunity to turn congress into a part of the procurement solution.

Last year, the General Accounting Office said that only about 6.6 percent of all 1982 DOD contracts were fully competitive. Despite some promising signs, such as the encouragement of "competition advocates" in the services, the 1983 percentage was actually down to 5.7 percent. Frankly, the business community and the American people are not going to tolerate this kind of performance much longer. We're giving away one of this country's most priceless advantages: it vital, energetic free enterprise system.

Independent testing and evaluation, warranties and procurement overhaul are examples of areas where executives can put their business expertise to work improving the U.S. defense establishment. There are other areas as well—the process of relating strategic goals to resources, for example, and the development of more reliable budget projections. It's time we did so.

Restoring defense excellence ought to be everybody's business.●

THE LATIN DEBT: A TIME BOMB WHOSE CLOCK IS TICKING

HON. MICHAEL D. BARNES

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues an article that appeared in the New York Times on July 1, on the political problems caused by the Latin American economic crisis. Its author, Ambler H. Moss, Jr., is a well-known expert who also served as U.S. Ambassador to Panama.

Ambassador Moss argues that: "The economic crisis in Latin America has clearly become a far greater threat to United States national security than any foreseeable Soviet or Cuban activities in the hemisphere."

The Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, which I have the honor to chair, just concluded a series of hearings on the return of democracy in the region, and all of our expert witnesses argued that the greatest threat to redemocratization is the debt.

I agree with Ambassador Moss: "It is a time that calls for more imagination on the part of the United States Government, better definition and pursuit of its real interests and much more statesmanship."

The article follows:

THE POLITICAL WAVES OF LATINS' ECONOMICS

(By Ambler H. Moss, Jr.)

MIAMI.—It is time that Washington showed greater understanding of the political as well as the economic dimension of the Latin American debt crisis.

Argentina again occupied center stage last week in the now familiar Latin American debt drama. In the latest episode, Buenos Aires arranged at the last minute to pay $350 million in overdue interest payments by yesterday, or United States banks would have been required to reduce the size of their declared profits, risking tremors in the international financial structure.

We have seen various Latin American countries go to the financial brink in the last two years. Perhaps we now tend to look at each new crisis as a rerun of "The Perils of Pauline": We don't worry too much because we know that the heroine never quite drops off the cliff.

But even this new temporary solution for Argentina, in which the consortium of lending banks agreed to another short-term extension of credit and Argentina further depleted its foreign reserves, will not eliminate the real danger—the potential early death of Argentina's newly gained democracy.

President Raul Alfonsin's inauguration last Dec. 10 ended nearly 10 years of mismanagement and terror under a series of military juntas. Chronic economic ineptitude had been compounded by a military debacle in the Falklands (Malvinas) war with Britain in 1982. Moreover, the "dirty war" against domestic insurgents begun by the military in the early 1970's had turned into a blood bath of torture, assassination and "disappearances" of thousands of men, women and children by the regular military and state-condoned death squads.

The return of democracy brought euphoria—and retribution. Three of the generals who had ruled Argentina, including Leopoldo Galtieri (who launched the calamitous Malvinas invasion) were put under arrest awaiting trial, as were a number of military officers associated with the violence against civilians.

Now, there are new clouds on the horizon. Last week, 50,000 Argentine youths marched in the streets of Buenos Aires in protest against the International Monetary Fund and "international usury"—meaning foreign creditor banks. The demonstrations included young members of Mr. Alfonsin's own party and may have been staged in part to back his Government in its stalled negotiations for new credit from the I.M.F. But among the demonstrators were those who called Mr. Alfonsin a "thief for knuckling under the banks."

Mr. Alfonsin's popularity and ability to deal with a wide range of his country's problems are clearly linked to finding early relief from the effects of the financial crisis. If the fate of Argentina really matters to Washington, the United States should do more than watch passively and preach financial austerity. Two weeks ago, hoping to press Argentina to come to terms with the I.M.F., Washington withdrew the promise made on March 30 to guarantee the $300 million short-term credit extended to Argentina by four Latin American countries. Latin Americans tend to interpret such actions as bullying, and it offers no concrete solution.

The $350 billion Latin American debt affects all countries of the region in similar ways. This year, depending on United States interest rates as much as $45 million in interest alone will be paid by Latin America to the banks. Because up to 50 percent, and more in some cases, of export earnings are being spent on interest payments, economies are not growing while populations are. The result is a lowering of living standards and no jobs for young people leaving school. It is a time bomb whose clock is ticking. The United Nations Economic Commission on Latin America has stated that some countries are "close to the critical limits of social tolerance." Riots erupted in the Dominican Republic last April 23, leaving scores of dead and wounded, after negotiations with the I.M.F. had led to a sudden rise in the prices of staples such as beans, rice and cooking oil.

Thus far, the policies of the United States, the I.M.F. and the large banks of this country have been more or less parallel. They have waited for the United States' economic recovery to stimulate Latin American exports, relied on I.M.F.-prescribed austerity measures to rationalize the finances of the Latin American governments and counted on solidarity and creativity on the part of the banks in the periodic rescheduling of loans. Increasing numbers of United States economists and political experts, including, most recently, Henry A. Kissinger, are now saying that this policy alone will not work. Latin Americans have been saying so for some time.

Financially, it is not working because United States interest rates continue to rise. Each point of increase adds about $2 billion to Latin America's bill in annual interest payments. The conference of Latin America foreign and finance ministers in Cartagena, Colombia, which ended June 23, insisted that there be a "drastic and immediate drop in interest rates." Yet three days later, the United States prime rate went up half a point, to 13 percent. President Reagan's reaction was simply to chide the banks for their nervousness. Latin Americans are beginning to blame not the International Monetary Fund so much as the United States Government for its inability to manage its budget deficit, which most economists cite as a principal cause of continued-high interest rates.

In Argentina and in other countries, the real question is how long the political and social fabric will hold together as economies stagnate or worsen. Argentina is especially vulnerable, because its democracy is, fragile.

An old myth has been thoroughly debunked in Latin America—that military governments can be efficient managers of an economy and can bring order and stability. Now a new one needs equally critical examination—that when a discredited military establishment skulks back to the barracks, democracy has a long-term chance. It may not.

Washington surely realizes that democracy, free enterprise, economic progress and human rights are all essential for stability and prosperity in Latin America. It is in the United States' interest to think beyond the short term—not our strongest national trait—when it comes to preserving democracy in Argentina, or for that matter in the Dominican Republic or Mexico. The economic crisis in Latin America has clearly become a far greater threat to United States national security than any foreseeable Soviet or Cuban activities in the hemisphere.

What could Washington do if it recognized the problem fully? There is no lack of serious debt reform proposals, which range from greater "burden-sharing" among banks, debtor countries and United States taxpayers, to transfering a part of the debt to international financial institutions, to limiting payments to a percentage of export earnings. The guiding principle is that debt service must never result in a halt of economic development or a deterioration of Latin America's political and social situation.

It is a time that calls for more imagination on the part of the United States Government, better definition and pursuit of its real interests and much more statesmanship.●

TRIBUTE TO LT. COL. A.G. ADAIR

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to commend an outstanding resident of Monahans, TX, in the 16th Congressional District: Lt. Col. A.G. Adair, who was just elected president of the Texas State Guard Association during the 41st Annual Conference of the Association in Austin last weekend. As a member of House Armed Services Committee, I understand the unique and invaluable contribution to America's national defense that is made by the Texas State Guard. Lieutenant Colonel Adair's experience and qualifications are best summed up by the following article from the Monahans News, which I urge all my colleagues to read.

The article follows:

[From the Monahans News, August 2, 1984]

TSGA Elects A.G. Adair as President

Lieutenant Colonel A.G. Adair of Monahans was elected President of the Texas State Guard Association during the 41st Annual Conference of the Association in Austin the past weekend. He succeeds Col. Kenneth R. Dawson of Midland.

The TSGA is made up of past and present members of the Texas State Guard, individuals who support the organization and many public officials who feel that the work of the State Guard is worthy and who want to lead a hand in perpetuating the state militia tradition.

The State Guard is divided into seven group areas which are identical to the regional areas of the Department of Public Safety. The Assocation has members in all seven of these areas of Texas.

LTC Rubin Shultz of Corpus Christi was named first vice president and LT Gary Brown of Tyler is the new second vice president. Mrs. Marjorie Keating of Austin is secretary of the Association. CPT Mary E. Adair of Monahans is a member of the board of directors.

LTC Adair is a nine year member of the State Guard and is presently assigned as commander of the 403d MP Bn. with headquarters in Monahans. He started his career in the Guard as first sergeant of Co. B stationed in Monahans, executive officer and commander of Co. B and then was assigned operations and training officer of the 403d when it was stationed in Andrews. After he was named battalion commander the headquarters was moved to Monahans.

The new president has been active in Association almost the same length of time he has been in the Guard. He has served as member of the board, second and first vice president. He holds a life membership in the TSGA.

At the present time, formative plans are being made nation-wide to organize a national association of state guards since state militias are currently being organized in every state in the union. LTC Adair expects his year as president to be a busy one. He has set as his primary goal the complete enlistment and involvement of every member of the State Guard in the affairs of the Association.

In addition to LTC Adair and CPT Adair, others from Monahans in attendance at the conference were LTC and Mrs. Jimmy C. Marks and SFC Wilma Reynolds. LTC Marks is operations and training officer in Headquarters 5th MP Group and SFC Reynolds is communication sergeant, HQ 403d MP Bn. She will chair a special committee created by President Adair.●

INADEQUACIES OF AMERICA'S SCHOOL SYSTEMS

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. PHILIP M. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, as a historian and former history professor at Indiana and Bradley Universities, I find it frightening that American students—including college students—are not familiar with many historical facts. To put it simply, without the knowledge of some of these facts we cannot explain to our youth the importance of American traditions or why our society must be protected and defended.

Recently, an article by Benjamin J. Stein, in an October 1983 edition of the Washington Post, was brought to my attention. It is noteworthy because it clearly indicates where our school systems have failed.

The lack of knowledge by our youth is an alarming problem, and in order to rectify this problem, we must be more sensitive to the inadequacies of our school systems. Failure to correct so basic a deficiency will fertilize the seeds of national downfall. It is knowledge of the basic, fundamental essence of U.S. history that preserves the direction and orientation of our American Republic. Without passing that understanding on to future generations, we will surely pass into the dustbin of history.

At this time, I would like to share with my colleagues the article by Mr. Stein.

The Cheerful Ignorance of the Young in L.A.

(By Benjamin J. Stein)

Los Angeles.—I spend a lot of time with teen-agers. Besides employing three of them part-time, I frequently conduct focus groups at Los Angeles area high schools to learn about teen-agers' attitudes toward movies or television shows or nuclear arms or politicians. I meet the friends of the teen-agers who work for me. I make it my business not only to meet those young people, but also to ask them about their lives and about what they know. In the course of two years of this kind of inquiry, I have collected a mass of data about how teen-agers see business (very negatively), how they feel about the likelihood of nuclear war (terrified), how they like Richard Gere (a lot), and how they feel about American cars (extremely negative).

But all of these specific attitudes pale into insignificance compared with something else I have learned of: the astounding level of ignorance of the Southern California teen-ager. No amount of preparation could possibly cushion the blows of unawareness of even the most elementary current events, history, politics, economics, or just what goes on each day in the world outside of Los Angeles which lurks in the cheerful minds of these children. I have not figured out a way to quantify this ignorance, but I can offer a few examples that might just make you wonder where all that money for public education is going.

Recently a 19-year-old junior at the University of Southern California sat with me while I watched "Guadalcanal Diary" on TV. It goes without saying that the child had never heard of Guadalcanal. More surprisingly, she did not know who the United States was fighting against in the Pacific. ("The Germans?") She was genuinely shocked to learn that all those little people on that island were Japanese and that the United States had fought a war against them. ("Who won?")

Another student at USC did not have any clear idea when World War II was fought. She believed it was some time this century. (She is a journalism major.) She also had no clear notion of what had begun the war for the United States. ("Pearl Harbor? Was that when the United States dropped the atom bomb on Hiroshima?") Even more astounding, she was not sure which side Russia was on and whether Germany was on our side or against us.

In fact, I have not yet found one single student in Los Angeles, in either college or high school, who could tell me the years when World War II was fought. Nor have I found one who could tell me the years when World War I was fought. Nor have I found one who knew when the American Civil War was fought.

Not one could name all the presidents since World War II. Only one could even place the correct decade in which Dwight Eisenhower was president. Not one could tell me who Martin Luther King Jr. was except that he was black. A few have known how many U.S. senators California has, but none has known how many Nevada or Oregon has. ("Really? Even though they're so small?") Of at least 10 whom I have asked, only one could name both of California's senators.

Of the (at least) 12 whom I have asked, none has known within 40 million what the population of the United States is. Only two could tell me where Chicago is, even in the vaguest terms. (My particular favorite geography lesson was the junior at the University of California at Los Angeles who thought that Toronto must be in Italy. My second-favorite geography lesson is the junior at USC, a pre-law student, who thought that Washington, D.C. was in Washington state.) None had even the vaguest idea of where New England is, and several had never heard of Vermont or Connecticut and could not identify them as states of the Union.

Not so long ago, I watched a television news show about the so-called "lifting" of martial law in Poland. On the screen were pictures of Poles in large pen-like enclosures rounded up after martial law was imposed. One of my assistants, a junior at USC, stared at the screen open-mouthed.

"What's going on there?" she asked. "Why are those people in that big cage?"

I explained that they had been imprisoned as the result of a crackdown by the communist government. "Why don't they just leave and come to L.A.?" she asked. I explained that they were not allowed to leave.

"They're not?" she said. "Why not?"

I explained that in totalitarian states, citizens usually could not emigrate.

"They can't?" she said. "Since when? Is that something new?"

After some explanation of that, she asked who "that guy in the uniform" (Wojciech Jaruzelski) was. I explained that he is the dictator of Poland. "He is?" she asked. "Why does he do that?"

She then expressed amazement that there were such things as non-free countries in the world. She had never known that before. She was amazed that there was a whole array of countries around Russia which were controlled by Russia. ("There are? Why doesn't Reagan make them stop?") She was also amazed that people could be and were put in prison for expressing political views in Russia. ("What a burnt idea.") Finally, she wondered why she had never been told about this subject before.

Of the teen-agers with whom I work, none had ever heard of Vladimir Ilyich Lenin. Only one could identify Josef Stalin. (My favorite answer "He was president just before Roosevelt.") Only two could even approximately identify Thomas Jefferson. Only one could place the date of the Declaration of Independence. None could name even one of the first 10 amendments to the Constitution or connect them with the Bill of Rights. Only one knew even roughly when the Great Depression was. None could say even approximately when Lyndon Johnson was president.

Only a few could articulate in any way at all why life in a free country is different from life in an un-free country. None had ever heard of the Warsaw Pact. None could tell me what NATO stood for. ("Aren't they the ones who put up the space shuttle and all those things?")

On and on it went. On and on it goes. I have mixed up episodes of ignorance of facts with ignorance of concepts because it seems to me that there is a connection. If a student has no idea when World War II was and who the combatants were and what they fought over, that same human being is likely to be ignorant of just what this society stands for. If a young woman has never heard of the Bill of Rights, that young woman is unlikely to understand why this is a uniquely privileged nation with uniquely privileged citizens, young and old. If a student has never heard of the Warsaw Pact and has no idea what the Russian system is all about, that student is unlikely to understand why sacrifice is necessary to defend this society.

The examples here could be repeated almost endlessly. (One night in 1982, I watched a TV miniseries about Adolf Hitler. In the series, a demented, defeated Hitler rants that he never wanted war, that it was forced on him by Russia and England. One of my friends at UCLA said to me while watching, "Why did Russia and England do that?") The point is that in a state of such astonishing ignorance, young Americans may well not be prepared for even the most basic national responsibility—understanding what the society is about and why it must be preserved. The kids I saw (and there may be lots of others who are different) are not mentally prepared to continue the society because they basically do not understand the society enough to value it.

None of this means that the children in my circle are bad children or inherently flawed. Far from it. They are fine human beings. Their comments often bring tears of joy to my eyes. Recently, two of them read an article in the newspaper about a militantly anti-Semitic organization. One of them pointed at the word "anti-Semite" and said, "What's this word?" I explained that it was someone who hated Jews for no other reason than that they were Jews. The girl looked at me with genuine amazement and asked, "Why would anyone do that?" The other girl said, "What is it again? I never heard of that."

I respectfully suggest that we should be happy and proud to have such gilded, innocent children in our midst. But unless they are given some concept of why the society must be protected and defended, I fear that they will learn too soon about a whole variety of ugly ideas they did not want to know about. If we are going to upgrade our educational system, if we are going to start teaching again, I hope we will begin by instructing young Americans with historical facts and with concepts about why the society is worth preserving. People who do not value what they have rarely keep it for long, and neither will we.●

THE 125TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BOROUGH OF EMMAUS, PA

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to formally recognize the people and the Borough of Emmaus as the 125th anniversary celebration of its incorporation as a borough approaches. I applaud the citizens of Emmaus for their hard work, dedication to their families, and their community spirit. People who hail from Emmaus speak of their town with warmth and affection.

Today, in observance of Emmaus' 125th anniversary, I would like to share with my colleagues and the American people some historical background about the Borough of Emmaus. Having once lived in Emmaus, I experienced a wholesome quality of life and can remember the residents' great sense of pride in their town and its interesting history.

The little village, once called Salzburg, was given its present name of Emmaus by Bishop Spangenberg of the Moravian Church during celebration of the Love Feast on April 3, 1761. The American Revolution brought new tribulations and a great deal of hardship to the residents of Emmaus. The Moravians, who refused to fight in the American Revolution were harassed, fined, and even imprisoned. During this time of persecution, the Moravian community survived these adversities by standing together.

The congregational village grew very slowly because the young people decided to leave rather than endure its austere religious life. In 1829, Moravian Church roles numbered only 131, but as the decade passed, the city of Emmaus opened its once closed village as the church council began to sell land to non-Moravians. This sale of land to non-Moravians signaled religious moderation by the Moravian settlers. One of the largest churches to organize in the town was the United Evangelical Church, which was the forerunner of a great number of churches found in the borough today.

During the last half of the 19th century, railroad builders reached Emmaus, and the first train passed through the village in the spring of 1859. This same year, Emmaus organized into a borough, and the first local officals were elected on October 31.

Emmaus' industrial history has been varied. Iron ore was mined in the area after 1850, and foundries have been active in Emmaus from 1869 to the present. From 1882 until recent times, silk manufacturing was also a major industry in the borough.

The borough continued to flourish throughout the 19th century and by 1903 had a population of 1,468. Today the borough boasts a population of almost 12,000.

In recent years Emmaus' citizens and their government have shown much concern for the well-being of the community. The East Penn School District is one of the finest school districts in the State of Pennsylvania, and its faculty, students, and parents must be recognized for their outstanding achievements. Such projects as the Emmaus Community Center, the Emmaus Youth Association programs, and the Emmaus Community Park are fine examples of this commitment. The people of Emmaus have demonstrated their pride in their community which dates back two and a quarter centuries. I congratulate them on this the 125th anniversary of Emmaus' incorporation as a borough.●

H.R. 6079, RIGHT TO FINANCIAL PRIVACY ACT AMENDMENTS

HON. DOUG BARNARD, JR.

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, most Members of Congress would be shocked to learn that more than one-half of our Nation's recent bank failures have been due in substantial measure to the criminal misconduct of bank officers, directors, and insiders. Losses from such failures in a recent 2½-year period total almost $1 billion. What is equally shocking is that many individuals responsible for such insider abuse escape criminal prosecution and civil enforcement action.

The Commerce, Consumer and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee, which I chair, has conducted an extensive investigation, including numerous hearings, into the failure of the Federal law enforcement agencies to effectively prosecute criminal misconduct by bank officals and insiders. During recent hearings, the FDIC, the Home Loan Bank Board, the Comptroller of the Currency, the SEC, several U.S. attorneys, and the Justice Department testified that the Right to Financial Privacy Act is a major impediment to prosecution of insider criminal misconduct in financial institutions.

The act requires notice to an individual who is the target of an investigation and whose financial records form the basis of a criminal referral. The problem arises when the individual under investigation is an officer, director, or other insider who has physical custody of or access to vital bank records and can alter, destroy or conceal them. In order not to provide notice to these insiders, the banking agencies or the financial institutions involved will often provide insufficient financial record information in their criminal referrals and will even refuse to provide staff assistance to the Justice Department. Consequently, U.S. attorneys often decline referrals involving open financial institutions or give them low priority. In sum, the act inadequately distinguishes between the privacy rights of arms-length bank customers and the rights of those who may be defrauding the bank from inside.

Because of the pressing need to investigate and prosecute insider bank fraud, particularly in this climate of increasing bank and thrift failures, I have introduced the "Right to Financial Privacy Act Amendments," a narrowly-drawn bill to address the specific problem of insider abuse. The bill implements two objectives: First, an exemption to the act's notice requirements for insiders or coconspirators who may be guilt of criminal misconduct against a financial institution; and second, the simplification of Justice Department procedures for the production and review of financial records subpoenaed by grand juries. I am attaching a copy of the amendment and a June 19, 1984, subcommittee staff memorandum which explains this matter in detail. I hope that the House Banking Committee will give serious attention to this legislation.

Commerce, Consumer, and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee members cosponsoring this bill are Congressmen COLEMEN of Texas, CONYERS, and SPRATT.

H.R. 6079

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Right to Financial Privacy Act Amendments".

DISCLOSURE OF RECORDS

SEC. 2. Section 1113 of the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3413) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(1) Nothing in this title shall prohibit any financial institution or supervisory agency (or any officer, employee, or agent of a financial institution or a supervisory agency) from providing to the Department of Justice financial records which such financial institution or supervisory agency has reason to believe are relevant to a possible violation of any law relating to crimes against financial institutions or supervisory agencies by—

"(1) any employee, officer, director, agent, or shareholder of such financial institution; or

"(2) any other person who aids or abets or conspires with any employee, officer, director, agent, or shareholder of such financial institution in the commission of any such crime.".

GRAND JURY INFORMATION

SEC. 3. (a) Section 1120 of the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3420) is amended by striking out paragraph (1) and redesignating paragraphs (2) through (4) as paragraphs (1) through (3), respectively.

(b) Section 1120(2) of the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3420(2)), as so redesignated by subsection (a) of this section, is amended by striking out "paragraph (2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraph (1)".

COMMERCE, CONSUMER, AND MONETARY AFFAIRS SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS,

Washington, DC, June 19, 1984.

MEMORANDUM

To: Doug Barnard, Jr., Chairman.

From: Peter Barash, Staff Director; Stephen McSpadden, Staff Counsel.

Subject: Legislation to Amend the Right to Financial Privacy Act.

A. SUMMARY

The subcommittee's criminal misconduct hearings in June 1983 and May 1984, provided evidence that the Right to Financial Privacy Act ("The Act") seriously impedes the investigation and prosecution of criminal misconduct in financial institutions by officers, directors, and insiders. This is because the Act prevents banking agencies and banks from disclosing to the Justice Department information derived from customer bank records, unless the customer receives simultaneous notification of the information transfer. When a person suspected of fraud against a financial institution is an officer, director or insider, simultaneous notification permits him or her to: (1) destroy, alter, or generate bank records, (2) impede the investigation by frivolously challenging in court the transfer of those records, or (3) otherwise obstruct an investigation. As the FDIC advised the subcommittee:

. . . the overall public perception that Congress is more concerned about privacy than about enforcing criminal banking laws cannot have a salutary effect on bringing bank defrauders and embezzlers to trial. (FDIC's 4/27/84 response, p. 18.)

After analyzing the competing interests of privacy and criminal justice, the subcommittee staff recommends the introduction of a narrowly-drawn bill to amend the Act, the language of which might be incorporated into omnibus banking legislation. Our proposal, a draft of which is attached, implements two objectives: (1) an exemption to the notice requirements of the Act for bank fraud by insiders, and (2) simplification of procedures for production and Justice Department review of financial records subpoenaed by grand juries.

The rationale for this amendment is the Financial Privacy Act's legislative history. This history reveals that its primary purpose was to protect the confidential relationship between banks and their "arms length" customers, not insiders who also happen to be customers. In some instances, in fact, a person's status as a customer may be due primarily or entirely to his illegal financial relationships with bank officials. Such a relationship to the bank should not give rise to the same level of "notice" protection accorded "arms length" customers by the Act, particularly when insiders can destroy records or conceal a crime if notified of an investigation.

B. BACKGROUND

Inadequate information in criminal referrals from banking agencies and banks appears to be a significant contributing factor to the low priority U.S. attorneys give bank fraud cases, particularly in open, problem financial institutions. The "notice" requirement of the Financial Privacy Act is universally cited as the reason for the paucity of information and lack of follow-up assistance provided to Justice.

While a prosecutor may obtain these "financial records" by way of a grand jury subpoena, that requires an expenditure of resources and a preliminary judgment that the matter warrants grand jury attention—a difficult determination at an early preinvestigation stage, especially without sufficient information in the referral document. The prosecutor and the FBI agent involved cannot fairly and objectively evaluate a case to understand its relevant importance, unless financial records are available. Therefore, they often give these matters low priority.

The Act also discourages banking agencies from providing effective assistance to Justice even after the referral is made. As the Comptroller of the Currency stated:

"Obviously, an experienced bank examiner can guide a prosecutor through the intricacies and implications of a complicated set of financial transactions only if it is possible to discuss that particular set of facts. Yet, given the scope of the RFPA, even information that is merely derived from customer records is protected. OCC is compelled, in the face of possible personal penalties imposed by the Act, to limit such assistance to bank examiners who know nothing about the facts of the actual criminal case at issue until an appropriate grand jury subpoena is issued. This sort of preliminary assistance is so limited, and susceptible of so many misinterpretations, that it may well impair the quality of the information on which the Department of Justice must make its threshold resource commitment decisions." (From OCC Testimony Appendix, p. 28; emphasis added.)

The U.S. Attorney from the Eastern District of Texas testified that: "The banking agencies could be a gold mine to us if they could be freed up to give us the information. That would take a tremendous load off the FBI."

Under typical circumstances, the problem of inadequate information arises under the Act as follows: During the course of an examination, a banking agency will uncover evidence revealing a possibly criminal violation by bank officers or directors (i.e., kickbacks for making loans (in violation of 18 USC 215) or misapplication or misappropriation of bank funds by making loans directly to themselves or through fictitious or nominee borrowers (in violation of 18 USC 656 [1]). The agency considers the relevant financial records pertaining to such loans to be "customers records" within the meaning of the Act, even though the "customer" may be an insider.

C. PROPOSED LEGISLATIVE SOLUTION NO. 1 (NOTICE EXEMPTION FOR INSIDER FRAUD)

We have drafted an additional exemption to the notice requirements of the Act. This would be the thirteenth exemption in the Act and is analogous to the subsection (h) exemption, applying whenever an investigation is directed against the financial institution itself. It would allow financial institutions or supervisory agencies to disclose information to the Justice Department derived from customers' records, without notice, but only when the person suspected of wrong doing is an officer, director, or insider. The disclosing entity would have to have reason to believe that the information or records are relevant to a possible crime against a financial institution committed by an employee, officer, director, agent, or shareholder of such institution,[2] or by any other persons, such as a borrower, who is in collusion with an insider.

D. PROPOSED LEGISLATIVE SOLUTION NO. 2 (SIMPLIFICATION OF PROCEDURES FOR PRODUCTION AND JUSTICE DEPARTMENT REVIEW OF DOCUMENTS UNDER GRAND JURY SUBPOENA)

The Act requires that financial records obtained by way of grand jury subpoena must actually be returned (i.e., physically turned over) to the grand jury itself. This is a very unusual requirement because subpoenaed records are often not returned to the grand jury, but only presented to it at time of indictment. This "return" requirement is burdensome and costly, and serves no valid privacy interest because grand jury subpoenas were expressly exempted from the notice requirements of the Act. U.S. Attorneys and the Justice Department have justifiably complained about this provision.

Other types of records can normally be returned to the U.S. Attorney's Office when the grand jury is not in session (usually the situation in less populated districts). More importantly, under a grand jury subpoena an FBI agent or a federal prosecutor can review the subpoenaed records on a business' premises (assuming the business consents), deciding which records are necessary and should be photocopied. At present, grand jury subpoenas in bank cases are broad and seek copies of many categories of records, because the prosecutor does not know which will be relevant, and the banks have no choice but to provide all of the information requested. For example, the U.S. Attorney may only want to select checks of certain amounts which look suspicious, but the bank will have to assemble and photocopy all checks written by a customer for several years just to find the ones which are relevant. Reimbursement to the financial institution and the consequent delays caused by scheduling the grand jury and by assembling and photocopying many unnecessary records—sometimes months—are negative and unnecessary consequences of the Act.

Other provisions in the Financial Privacy Act, 12 USC 3420, pertaining to grand jury records, protect against their unwarranted and unauthorized use, and they, together with Rule 6 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure relating to grand jury secrecy, would continue in force. The proposed amendment abolishes only this return requirement.

D. CONCLUSION

The SEC and the Justice Department recommended a major revamping of the Act, including an exemption from the notice requirements for the SEC. We counsel against that at this time. We stand a much better chance of having our primary objectives met—better detection and prosecution of criminal misconduct by insiders—with this narrowly-drawn legislation.●

[1] Often, these violations also involve false statements by the officer, director, or third party borrower, in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1005, 1006, 1007, or 1014.

[2] Almost all of the statutes applying to crimes against financial institutions cover these five categories of "insiders".

EDUCATION AMENDMENTS JEOPARDIZED BY SUPREME COURT RULING

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks all Americans have proudly applauded the accomplishments of our Olympic competitors. However, the door that opened opportunities in the field of sports for so many American women, including those who are winning medals in Los Angeles, may soon be permanently shut. Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 has been jeopardized by the Supreme Courts ruling in the Grove City College case. The House has acted responsibly by passing legislation, H.R. 5490, which would simply restore the principal civil rights statutes, including title IX, to their previous scope and coverage. Prompt action on this legislation is needed in the Senate. There are title IX cases pending in the courts now which are affected by the Grove City case. Without passage of this legislation equal opportunity for women will be severely impeded.

I commend to my colleagues an August 6 Washington Post op-ed piece "Thank Title IX for Some of That Gold" by Kenneth H. Bastian, Jr. Mr. Bastian cogently states the case for the Civil Rights Act of 1984.

THANK TITLE IX FOR SOME OF THAT GOLD

(By Kenneth H. Bastian, Jr.)

The whole world is watching American women win Olympic gold medals in Los Angeles, thanks to a dramatic explosion of interest—and money—devoted to women's sports in the United States. As a firm believer in the private sector, and as one who does not advocate government interference where it has no business, I'd be delighted to report that the catalyst for this growth in women's amateur sports was the same as for me: early encouragement from school athletic programs and generous corporate sponsorships.

Instead, a key reason that Cheryl Miller leads our women's basketball team to one victory after another and that Tracy Caulkins has broken swimming records for our country is that they, like the majority of their teammates, have benefited from a law passed by Congress in 1972.

That law, Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, states that "no person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any educational program or activity receiving financial or federal assistance."

It forced American schools, colleges and universities to broaden their women's athletic programs, and led to the first athletic scholarships being made available to women. The results have been dramatic: the number of women in intercollegiate athletic programs jumped from 16,000 in 1972 to over 150,000 today. In 1972 only 7 percent of high school athletes were girls. Ten years later, the number had jumped to 35 percent. The quality, as well as the quantity, of their achievements has been spectacular.

For example, men have taken only seven minutes off their best record marathon running time in the past 10 years. Women, many training seriously for the first time thanks to new women's professional coaches in school programs, have taken an hour and five minutes off their 1964 record. The same story can be told throughout the sports world: women finally are beginning to reach their potential as athletes.

Yet even as we cheer these victories, they may be fleeting. This dramatic increase in female athletic achievement is threatened by the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling in the Grove City College case, which struck down the Title IX provision.

Already schools are relaxing their efforts. According to the Women's Sports Foundation, 23 sex discrimiantion cases—aimed at forcing compliance with Title IX cases in school athletic programs—have been dropped.

"If an administrator takes it into his head that 'basketball is for boys,' he can do away with girls' basketball with no fear of governmental action," says Donna de Varona, a founding member and president of the Women's Sports Foundation, who won two Olympic gold medals in swimming in 1964.

We know what the future could hold without Title IX. After her gold medal victories in Tokyo, she had no real opportunities to train in college. However, Don Schollander, her fellow gold medalist, went on to compete for four more years in the highly developed world of men's collegiate swimming.

In the Grove City ruling, the Supreme Court found that the equality requirements are "program specific," so that if a college receives $10,000 in federal funds for its mathematics programs, that money must be spent equally for men and women only in mathematics programs. This interpretation allows schools to accept federal dollars through one office while discriminating in another.

Other school programs—including athletics—no longer need to provide equal opportunity if they don't get that direct federal funding. Many schools, therefore, won't have to comply, since their sports are funded from non-federal sources—student fees, alumni groups, ticket sales and television contracts.

Will they voluntarily continue to fund women's sports in a big way? Many believe not, since enough progress hasn't been made yet to elevate women's sports to the same profit-making level as men's sports. Before Title IX, which aimed at promoting the potential of each individual—whether male or female—in sports, athletic directors historically concentrated on whatever program provided that most public attention and revenue for their schools:

College athletic budgets for women, which grew under pressure from Title IX from 1 percent to 16 percent of the total spent on all college sports, probably will shrink again unless Congress acts.

Many of our future Olympic women athletes might have to retire in their teens, like de Varona, while their male counterparts compete for their colleges and universities. Scholarships may dry up. And this may turn out to be the peak year for U.S. women in the Olympics. Of the more than 200 women Olympians representing our nation in the current games, more than 170 received their training in a university or college athletic program.

It is ironic that this progress should be threatened in the same year that finds a woman on the Supreme Court, women aboard the space shuttle, women in the Cabinet and a woman running for vice president. It doesn't have to happen. Both the Democrats and the Republicans, who claim to offer equal oportunity for all Americans, should support legislation that will reinforce the key provisions of Title IX. In a May 22 press conference, the president voiced his support for Title IX, but the language reversing the Grove City College case is currently stalled in the Senate, and time is running out for passage and for our women athletes.●

THE LEGITIMATE GUN OWNER DEFENDS HIMSELF

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. PHILIP M. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, all too often when watching the news I learn of a murder that was committed by someone with a gun in the United States. Americans are quite disturbed at this violence and unfortunately many times place the blame for this crime on the legitimate gun owner.

The first outcry by gun control advocates is to ban the sale of handguns. What is almost never mentioned, and what I have stated over and over again, is that we must not deprive people of their right to protect themselves. The correct step in reducing crime in America is to put an end to the leniency of our court system. Until we hold criminals responsible for their actions, instead of the innocent, crime cannot be significantly reduced.

For my colleagues that may not agree with me, I would like to share with them the following article that appeared in the Asheville, NC, newspaper, the Asheville Citizen, on March 9, 1984. This article clearly demonstrates a case where individuals were successful in defending themselves when law enforcement agencies were spread too thin to be of adequate protection.

The article follows:

[From the Asheville (NC) Citizen, Mar. 9, 1984]

"TOUGH" MARION OFFERED FUGITIVES ONLY A FUSILLADE

MARION, NC (AP).—Two fugitives from a Tennessee prison made a mistake when they fled into "a tough community armed to the teeth," says a local district attorney.

Escapee Ronald Sotka, 41, better known as Ronald Freeman, died in this town of 3,680 during an early morning exchange of gunfire Wednesday. James Clegg, 30, was discovered in the basement garage of a private home 11 hours later and surrendered without resistance.

"In my opinion, maybe they made a mistake when they fled on foot into McDowell County," District Attorney Alan Leonard said. "They went into a pretty tough community, a tough community armed to the teeth."

Survival is "kind of a way of life around all small mountain towns," Mayor James Segars said Thursday. "People act out of fear for their lives, property and themselves."

Leonard said everywhere Freeman went early Wednesday—he broke into three east Marion homes—he was shot or shot at.

Leonard said Freeman was hit with shotgun buckshot and birdshot, three .30-caliber slugs and in a finger by a .22-caliber bullet, apparently one of six fired by homeowner Eddie Duncan, 59.

"As he (Duncan) was shooting, Sotka said, 'Don't shoot, don't shoot me again,' " Leonard said Thursday.

Minutes later, Freeman was shot to death when he opened fire on several law enforcement officers who cornered him in an abandoned house.

As armed law enforcement officers swept through still neighborhoods later in the day looking for Clegg, the second escapee, people stayed inside—afraid but vigilant.

Some downtown storeowners, even though open, kept their doors locked and signs taped out front asking customers to knock and be recognized.

"The majority of the people say it's either kill or be killed," said Gene Nichols, 43, who had a loaded gun at his home entrances, the bedroom and basement. "They think that's just the way things are these days."

Added Phil Rice, 45, a Marion factory worker: "They'd shoot in a heartbeat."

By Thursday, the scene of Ronald Freeman's bloody death was already a busy shrine for the curious.

"The cars was coming through here till eight or nine o'clock last night," said Millie Hakala, 55, owner of the green, two-room shack where Freeman died in a hail of gunfire.

"They just want to see the bullet holes, want to see where he was lyin' dead."●

WOMEN'S EDUCATION AND OLYMPIC GOLD

HON. PAUL SIMON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a recent Washington Post article about the correlation between title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 and the rate at which American women are winning gold medals in this summer's Olympics. The author is Kenneth H. Bastian, Jr., director of east coast operations for the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee. Mr. Bastian credits the success of the women athletes with the early training they received in school athletic programs that were mandated 12 years ago in title IX. He believes the sports programs that schools, colleges, and universities were mandated to establish are now producing very tangible results. Mr. Bastian is concerned about the effect of the Supreme Court's decision in Grove City College against Bell on women's sports programs. He urges passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1984 in the Senate before school relax their efforts; this body passed the bill on June 26, by a vote of 375 to 32. According to the Women's Sports Foundation, 23 sex discrimination cases focusing on school athletics programs have been dropped since the Grove City College decision.

On a more personal note, I have watched the value of the increased emphasis on women's athletics over the past 12 years. My daughter Shelia is one of those who benefited directly from title IX. She was the AIAW, division III high jump champion in 1982.

I commend this article to you as a further justification for passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1984 now.

THANK TITLE IX FOR SOME OF THAT GOLD

(By Kenneth H. Bastian, Jr.)

The whole world is watching American women win Olympic gold medals in Los Angeles, thanks to a dramatic explosion of interest—and money—devoted to women's sports in the United States. As a firm believer in the private sector, and as one who does not advocate government interference where it has no busines, I'd be delighted to report that the catalyst for this growth in women's amateur sports was the same as for me: early encouragement from school athletic programs and generous corporate sponsorships.

Instead, a key reason that Cheryl Miller leads our women's basketball team to one victory after another and that Tracy Caulkins has broken swimming records for our country is that they, like the majority of their teammates, have benefited from a law passed by Congress in 1972.

That law, Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, states that "no person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any educational program or activity receiving financial or federal assistance."

It forced American schools, colleges and universities to broaden their women's athletic programs, and led to the first athletic scholarships' being made available to women. The results have been dramatic: the number of women in intercollegiate athletic programs jumped from 16,000 in 1972 to over 150,000 today. In 1972 only 7 percent of high school athletes were girls. Ten years later, the number had jumped to 35 percent. The quality, as well as the quantity, of their achievements has been spectacular.

For example, men have taken only seven minutes off their best record marathon running time in the past 10 years. Women, many training seriously for the first time thanks to new women's professional coaches in school programs, have taken an hour and five minutes off their 1964 record. The same story can be told throughout the sports world: women finally are beginning to reach their potential as athletes.

Yet even as we cheer these victories, they may be fleeting. This dramatic increase in female athletic achievement is threatened by the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling in the Grove City College case, which struck down the Title IX provision.

Already schools are relaxing their efforts. According to the Women's Sports Foundation, 23 sex discrimination cases—aimed at forcing compliance with Title IX cases in school athletic programs—have been dropped.

"If an administrator takes it into his head that 'basketball is for boys,' he can do away with girls' basketball with no fear of governmental action," says Donna de Varona, a founding member and president of the Women's Sports Foundation, who won two Olympic gold medals in swimming in 1964.

She knows what the future could hold without Title IX. After her gold medal victories in Tokyo, she had no real opportunities to train in college. However, Don Schollander, her fellow gold medalist, went on to compete for four more years in the highly developed world of men's collegiate swimming.

In the Grove City ruling, the Supreme Court found that the equality requirements are "program specific," so that if a college receives $10,000 in federal funds for its mathematics programs, that money must be spent equally for men and women only in mathematics programs. This interpretation allows schools to accept federal dollars through one office while discriminating in another.

Other school programs—including athletics—no longer need to provide equal opportunity if they don't get that direct federal funding. Many schools, therefore, won't have to comply, since their sports are funded from non-federal sources—student fees, alumni groups, ticket sales and television contracts.

Will they voluntarily continue to fund women's sports in a big way? Many believe not, since enough progress hasn't been made yet to elevate women's sports to the same profit-making level as men's sports. Before Title IX, which aimed at promoting the potential of each individual—whether male or female—in sports, athletic directors historically concentrated on whatever program provided the most public attention and revenue for their schools.

College athletic budgets for women, which grew under pressure from Title IX from 1 percent to 16 percent of the total spent on all college sports, probably will shrink again unless Congress acts.

Many of our future Olympic women athletes might have to retire in their teens, like de Varona, while their male counterparts compete for their colleges and universities. Scholarships may dry up. And this may turn out to be the peak year for U.S. women in the Olympics. Of the more than 200 women Olympians representing our nation in the current games, more than 170 received their training in a university or college athletic program.

It is ironic that this progress should be threatened in the same year that finds a woman on the Supreme Court, women aboard the space shuttle, women in the Cabinet and a woman running for vice president. It doesn't have to happen. Both the Democrats and the Republicans, who claim to offer equal opportunity for all Americans, should support legislation that will reinforce the key provisions of Title IX. In a May 22 press conference, the president voiced his support for Title IX, but the language reversing the Grove City College case is currently stalled in the Senate, and time is running out for passage and for our women athletes.●

OUTSTANDING DISABLED VETERAN FOR 1984

HON. THOMAS A. DASCHLE

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, a remarkable veteran and impressive leader, Gene Murphy, was just chosen the "Outstanding Disabled Veteran for 1984" by the Disabled American Veterans organization. I have known Gene for many years and found him a man of integrity, inspiration, and commitment to his family, community, and fellow veterans. He is well known and respected in South Dakota and his recent election as State Commander of the DAV testifies to his leadership abilities. In short, Gene is an excellent and most deserving recipient for this award and I hope my colleagues will read the following article about Gene taken from the August DAV magazine:

OUTSTANDING DISABLED VETERAN FOR 1984 . . .

'A DOER' WHO WANTS TO HELP OTHERS

"After being hit, I felt a burning and stinging feeling. I thought I'd bought the farm."

Gene Murphy of Sioux Falls, S.D., 35, a stocky man of medium height, sits almost complacently in his wheelchair as he recalls the day he was wounded in South Vietnam. It was April 21, 1969. He was only 20 at the time. "I was a sergeant and squad leader in charge of 10 men," he said. "I didn't have to go on that patrol. I had less than 30 days to go in Vietnam, but I told my lieutenant I wanted to go with my men."

That is the spirit that characterizes the life of Gene Murphy, the DAV's outstanding Disabled Veteran for 1984. He will receive the coveted award from National Commander Dennis A. Joyner at the DAV National Convention in Washington, D.C., later this month.

His story is one of courage, determination, and dedication. Paralyzed from the waist down because of wounds inflicted by North Vietnamese troops, Murphy has been able to overcome his handicap and to become an example and a leader for other disabled veterans and handicapped individuals in South Dakota.

"I've always felt that it's up to the individual to either sit back and let life pass you by, or to get involved and do something," Murphy says. "I guess I've always been a doer."

Murphy, who was awarded the Bronze Star with "V" device and several other commendations for bravery in South Vietnam, served with Co. C, 1st Btn., 12th Inf. Regt., 4th Inf. Div.

Recalling the day he was wounded, Murphy said: "We were in a thick jungle area. Six of us were hit by small arms fire. They were AK47s." Murphy said he had not worried about being hit all the time he was in Vietnam. "I wasn't even worried about it when I went on this patrol," he said. "A few minutes before I was wounded I told the guy in front of me that I had a funny feeling. About 15 or 20 steps later I was hit. I couldn't feel my legs when I fell, so I moved to see if my legs were still there. When I moved they opened fire again, and I was hit in the ankle. So I quit moving."

Medivac helicopters soon arrived at the scene, but were unable to land because of the thick jungle. They hovered above the tree tops in an attempt to lift out the wounded, but fierce enemy fire drove them away. With night coming on, the 'copters returned to their base.

Murphy and his wounded comrades had to lay in the jungle for 14 hours before they could be lifted out by helicopter the next day. Murphy was the first to be lifted out.

"It was a long night," Murphy said. "They ran out of morphine at 2 a.m., and my lieutenant screamed in pain all night. I wasn't in too much pain, just sort of numb, and I was afraid I was going to die."

Murphy was comforted through the long night by his childhood friend, Lyle Bowes. Born and raised in White, S.D., a small town about 60 miles north of Sioux Falls, the two joined the Army together, and remained together through most of their time in the Army. Bowes now lives in Brookings, about 50 miles north of Sioux Falls. He and Murphy are still close friends.

Murphy, an active youth who liked all types of athletics and hunting and fishing before joining the Army, knows how hard the readjustment to a wheelchair can be. He spent 14 months in four different hospitals: Pleiku, South Vietnam; Yokohama, Japan; Fitzsimons General Hospital, Denver, Colo.; and Wood VA Medical Center, Milwaukee, Wis.

He was at the 71st Evacuation Hospital in Pleiku for 18 days. It was on the fifth day at this hospital that he learned he'd never walk again.

"I told the chaplain and doctors to get the hell out," Murphy says. "I was angry at first. But, I also was glad to be alive, and slowly I began to realize that there were still many things I could do.

"I guess I've had a positive attitude all my life. Looking around and seeing others worse off than I was made me feel very lucky to be alive."

His brother, Robert, an Army lieutenant in Vietnam at the time, visited him while he was in the hospital in Pleiku. "He was a big encouragement to me," Murphy said.

"At every hospital, I kept looking around and seeing others worse off than me," Murphy said. "This was especially true at Fitzsimons, where there were several quad and triple amputees. When I'd look at these fellows, it made me happy to be alive and to be in the shape I was in."

Despite the hours of physical therapy at the hospitals and the self confidence ingrained in him, Murphy had some doubts and fears when he returned to his hometown in a wheelchair in 1970, "I was scared about going home," he says honestly, "I was apprehensive about what I was going to do."

Murphy credits several close friends, all Vietnam War veterans, and his four brothers for helping him to readjust to civilian life in a wheelchair.

"I came home in July, and that fall my brothers began to talk about going hunting," Murphy recalls. "I wasn't planning to go hunting, although I had always gone before. My oldest brother, the one who'd helped me in Vietnam, went down and bought a license for me to hunt from a standing vehicle. They always encouraged me to do the things I'd done before."

Murphy said four close friends, all Vietnam War veterans, always included him in things they were doing. "We just sort of fit in together," he said. "When they'd go to nearby Brookings, a college town, to look for girls, or wherever they were going, they'd just take me along."

Murphy decided to attend college, and enrolled at Dakota State College in Madison, S.D. Before his injury, Murphy had wanted to be a coach. Now he decided that business administration would be more suitable.

He encountered several physical obstacles at Dakota State. "It was an older college," he said. "Most of the buildings were built long before accessibility for wheelchairs was ever thought of. For one class, I had to crawl up three flights of stairs and drag my wheelchair behind me."

While at college, Murphy met his wife, Eldine. She was a nursing student. When she had to move to Sioux Falls in 1972 to continue her studies, the two decided to get married and make the move together.

She is now a registered nurse, and works parttime for a Sioux Falls physician. Murphy continued his studies at Augustana College, a private school in Sioux Falls, and needs only about three courses to complete requirements for his bachelor's degress.

In Sioux Falls, Murphy became active in the local DAV chapter and in the North Central Chapter of the Paralyzed Veterans of America. As a result, he soon found himself being appointed to various committees and boards regarding improving conditions for the handicapped.

"I always felt that it was better to sit on these boards to help make policies and procedures than to be sitting on the outside and trying to change policies and procedures," Murphy says.

He has served on the Governor's Handicapped Advisory Board, Citizens Advisory Committee for Rehabilitation at McKennan Hospital, Barrier, Awareness Committee and Project Mobility for the City of Sioux Falls, Sioux Falls Mayor's Committee on the Handicapped, and others.

"We also developed a speakers' bureau," Murphy points out. "We'd go to various civic groups or to the schools and talk about our experiences, about employment for the handicapped, about accessibility, and other matters regarding the handicapped."

Because of his positive attitude about rehabilitation and his successful readjustment to life in a wheelchair, Murphy is often called by hospitals and doctors to counsel new spinal cord injury (SCI) victims.

"Sometimes this is a difficult task," Murphy says. "However, it's something I enjoy doing. Some of them want to give up entirely. They don't even want to live anymore. I try to encourage them, tell them of their potential, their abilities. There's still so many things they can do."

Murphy continued his love for sports by competing as much as possible in wheelchair athletics. In 1972, he and two other fellows organized the "Sioux Wheelers," a group of disabled veterans and handicapped individuals who participate in wheelchair basketball, softball, trap shooting, and track and field events.

"We did it primarily for two reasons," Murphy says. "We liked the exercise and the fun of competing, and we wanted to show other handicapped individuals that you don't have to crawl into a corner or sit in a back room at home just because of some physical impairment."

Murphy is one of the team's top competitors, and has been awarded sportsmanship and outstanding player trophies at several tournaments. As one of eight wheelchair veterans sponsored by DAV Chapter 1 at the National Wheelchair Veterans Games in Long Beach, Calif., last year, Murphy won a gold medal in trap shooting and a bronze medal in the slalom.

When his wheelchair is not speeding around a basketball court or an athletic field, it most likely will be rolling down the halls and into the offices of state legislators at the State Capitol in Pierre. A respected lobbyist for legislation affecting disabled veterans, veterans, and handicapped individuals, Murphy has testified on as many as 28 bills in one year.

The DAV has been his first love since becoming a life member in 1970, and he's held every elected post in the chapter and several at the department level. He's been department adjutant since 1982 and chapter adjutant since 1983. He was elected department commander this year.

As department senior vice commander last year, Murphy was in charge of the department's membership campaign. Through his organizational and inspirational efforts, the department has grown from about 3,300 to nearly 4,000 members this year, becoming the first DAV department to surpass its membership goal.

Likewise, DAV Chapter 1 in Sioux Falls has grown at a phenomenal pace, jumping from 600 members a few years ago to nearly 1,400 today. The chapter home, a modern 80-by-140-foot structure, has had three additions in recent years to accommodate the many services offered for its members and special events for the public. It is completely accessible for the handicapped.

"As far as my life is concerned," Murphy says, "I have confidence in the Lord. My life could easily have ended over there in Vietnam. But, I believe He sent me back for a purpose, and that is to help other individuals like myself."●

THE POSITIVE EFFECTS OF IMMIGRATION

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I realize that we have debated the issue of immigration reform at great length. I, nonetheless, believe that two articles published in the August 2 edition of the New York Times reinforces the position that I, and many of our colleagues, have taken.

I submit these articles for my colleagues so that they may better understand my opposition to H.R. 1510, the Immigration Reform and Control Act. I hope these articles are of some use, particularly in light of the fact that we may have to consider a conference report on H.R. 1510.

The articles follow:

DON'T FEAR JOB LOSS

(By Julian Simon)

WASHINGTON.—The Simpson-Mazzoli immigration legislation has come unstuck. A conference committee must now decide how to reconcile the Senate and House bills, amid unexpected pressures from the Democratic ticket. This affords an opportunity for Congress to consider some new evidence bearing upon a key premise of Simpson-Mazzoli—that immigrants increase unemployment by displacing natives from jobs.

Displacement is the most emotional and influential fear about immigration. A headline in a Florida newspaper reads: "Haitian Refugees Take Away Jobs." In Texas, the winner of a Senate primary asserts that "Sixty-five Americans lose their jobs for every 100 undocumented workers who are here." In Colorado, Gov. Richard D. Lamm says that importing more labor would be "demographic and economic insanity." And early on, the AFL-CIO, went on record that it would fight the "hiring of foreigners as temporary workers."

The complaint is ancient. John Toland wrote in 1714: "The vulgar, I confess, are seldom pleas'd in a country with the coming in of Foreners. . . . from their grudging at more persons sharing the same trades or business with them." The complaint also seems to make sense: If jobs are limited and immigrants occupy some, there must be fewer jobs for natives. Some displacements and some reduction in wages must occur when potential workers are added to an occupation, whether laboring or doctoring.

There are, however, two opposing forces at work—expansion in aggregate demand and creation of new businesses by immigrants. The income immigrants earn increases the demand for goods and for workers to produce them, which in turn produces more income and more new jobs. This continues until the economy approaches a new equilibrium, with the same rate of unemployment as before. Toland understood this process well: "We deny not that there will thus be more taylors and shoomakers; but there will also be more suits and shoos made than before."

Immigrants also start new businesses. These are usually small ones, but an astonishing 66 percent of new jobs arise in firms with 20 or fewer employees. A Canadian sample found that 5 percent of adult immigrants started businesses within their first three years. Each 100 adult immigrants create new businesses that open up 30 new jobs, many of them filled by natives. So even if one native Canadian were pushed out of a preexisting job by each five immigrants—an improbably high number—this effect would be more than made up by the new jobs created by the immigrants and occupied by natives.

The direct evidence about displacement is of two kinds—within specific industries and within the economy as a whole. A reliable study of the effects of the Bracero guest-worker program in the Southwest from 1942 to 1964 showed that one native agricultural worker was displaced for each four Mexican guest workers. But this greatly overstates total displacement because some or most displaced workers find jobs elsewhere, and some would be displaced by machines if not by Mexicans.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service conducted two mass, forcible removals of illegal immigrants from jobs in California. Later checks on the illegals' jobs showed a low rate of substitution of natives for the illegals. And, in another study, Thomas Muller of the Urban Institute found no evidence of increased unemployment in California due to Mexicans, though he did find evidence of lowered wages.

With Stephen Moore, I examined how the rates of immigration into a large number of cities in the United States from 1960 to 1976 related to changes in unemployment rates. We found that no matter how we looked at it, the effect was either very small or nonexistent. While our study has not been examined in detail by colleagues, we believe it contains much more solid evidence on the matter than provided by previous studies that have been cited in the newspapers but also have not been available for scrutiny.

In sum, workers in a particular industry may be injured. But in the economy as a whole, immigrants not only take jobs, they make jobs. Their income adds to total demand, creating new jobs, and they open businesses that employ natives as well as other immigrants and themselves. Job displacement is mainly a false fear, and rational Americans should not let this fear influence immigration legislature.

DON'T CLOSE THE DOOR

(By Tibor Machan)

SANTA BARBARA, CA.—Amidst all the debate about illegal aliens and how to punish those who hire them, we have failed to develop a principled approach to immigration in general, based on the idea of a free society. This approach should be based on the idea that, outside of matters of national security, no limit should be placed on immigration for those wishing to make a new life here.

One could think me biased, since I am a refugee from Communist Hungary, perhaps just clearing my own conscience for "invading" these shores. But there are very good reasons, consistent with the American political tradition, for not barring people from making their living in a free society if they so choose. And there are very good reasons for pardoning all those who entered "illegally"—that is, in violation of an unjust law barring them from entering a supposedly free country—and for abandoning the revolting idea of punishing the American employers who make a living possible for such immigrants. It is wholly unbecoming of a society whose gateway is the Statue of Liberty to follow anything other than an open-door policy.

The major objections to such a policy have been forcefully stated. Foreign workers will displace native workers, add to an already overburdened welfare state, exhaust the patience of our taxpayers and accelerate the degradation of the environment. Finally, it is argued, it would be morally wrong to pardon illegal immigrants when legal immigrants were subject to severe restrictions and told to wait their turn.

These arguments carry great appeal across the country, but they aren't good enough to support abandoning one of America's most important historical missions and the fundamental principle of liberty. Government was established not to secure our right to a certain standard of living, but to secure our right to liberty.

Recent studies have challenged the assumption that immigrants threaten American living standards. But even if the "threat" to American employment exists, it should not be repelled at the expense of liberty. In a free, competitive society one has no more right to one's job or level of income than an athlete has to keeping "his" world record. And isn't there something obscene about complaining about a temporary setback in one's standard of living when those who would compete with (not rob) us are fighting for bare subsistence?

As to immigrants going on welfare, many who come to this country are probably in need and would turn for help to our many government and public service institutions. But here too, the matter does not end with the figures alone. If it is indeed morally proper to accommodate the needy, shouldn't all persons benefit from such moral convictions? Restricting humanitarianism to Americans is certainly a phony moralism.

As to the overpopulation issue, the morally acceptable way to cope with it is to seek out new frontiers, including new solutions to old problems—yes, even outer space. For that, no greater resource exists than the talents of the most eager people of the world, those who want to make a real change in their lives. No other group fits that description so well as immigrants, who by definition are people who are willing to assume risks so as to bring about a brighter future.

Finally, the matter of pardoning illegal aliens should be thought of as righting a mistaken policy. It should not be difficult to understand once we appreciate the principles at stake here. We complain about other nations—the Soviet Union, for example—closing their doors to those who wish to leave. But this is a hollow complaint if we, in turn, close our doors to those who wish to enter with good will and the determination to do well in life. How could they help but be an asset to our society?●

UNNECESSARY GOVERNMENT SUBSIDIES

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. PHILIP M. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, an article by William D. Grampp in a May 14, 1984, edition of the Chicago Tribune was recently brought to my attention. It is noteworthy because it is just one example of unnecessary Government subsidies.

Americans should be outraged with the problem of continuous excessive spending by their elected officials. The cost of subsidizing so many small-interest groups is the diversion of Federal dollars that could be spent in more needed programs. The practice of taking money away from the majority to subsidize a few must be stopped. The time to put an end to this is now.

As Congress continues to consider ways to reduce our trillion-dollar deficit, I would like to share with my colleagues the following article by Mr. Grampp, which clearly indicates one program that needs to be reevaluated.

ART FOR SUBSIDIES' SAKE

(By William D. Grampp)

The federal government in several hundred ways assists the arts directly. There were 252 programs in 1975 when the last inventory was made. Indirectly it assists the arts by tax concessions to arts organizations and deductions to taxpayers who make gifts to them. There also are state and local programs.

Whether any of them are a proper function of government is asked by Prof. Edward C. Banfield in his new book, "The Democratic Muse: Visual Arts and the Public Interest" (Basic, 1984). He argues against federal programs, and an argument also may be made against the others.

Neither argument appears to interest the Arts Caucus of the House of Representatives, some 200 members who do not doubt the propriety of government assistance and consider only how much there should be. Congress soon will act on the appropriation of the National Endowment for the Arts, which received just over $3 million when it began in 1965 and $162 million last year.

Among its original purposes was bringing the arts to more people. While it never aspired to making the arts a mass phenomenon, it now wants to do more with its subsidies than "to encourage those on the edges." If Congress does not care to ask whether the people should provide for themselves in the article of art, it might consider how well the government has provided for them. It could begin with information collected by the NEA itself and go on to other sources. All make the same report.

The people who are interested in art today are those who were interested in it before 1965, and they are the kind of people who have been interested in it throughout history. They always have been a minority of the population and have been privileged. The American government, after all of its millions have been spent, has not altered the fact and could not have done so. It should have known as much and would have if it had consulted the experience of time and if its purpose had truly been to improve popular culture. Not even ancient Greece, with its magnificent drama, could bring the common people into the theater without paying them to attend. It did just that but mistakenly set the amount equal to the daily wages of a soldier, so that men went to the theater instead of into the army. Still, to pay people to experience art would be quite in order if it were the invaluable asset it is said to be by some who advocate subsidies.

The NEA published in 1978 a survey of 272 audience studies, two-thirds of them made in the '70s. They showed that the median income was 15% to 30% above the population median; that about 85% of the audiences had been to college while only 26% of the population had; that 56% of the audiences were in professional occupations while only 15% of the labor force were; that blue-collar workers comprised 7% of the audiences and 47% of the labor force, and that the "data do not reveal any striking changes in the composition of audiences" between 1960 and 1977.

A survey reported in Museum News last year stated that hundreds of studies made over 50 years show that museum visitors "are likely to be in the upper education, occupation, and income groups." The Australian economists, C.D. Throsby and G.A. Withers, claim that "when attending a concert or play in New York, London, or Sydney, you are likely to be sitting among a group of people whose financial status, education, and occupation are strikingly similar." They also report that these people are more in favor of arts subsidies than the people you are not likely to be sitting next to. That fact, while not surprising, is instructive because it indicates that the support for subsidies comes from people who benefit by them. They are not only the audiences. They include musicians, conductors, actors, dancers, composers, stagehands, artists, museum employees, the people in government who dispense the money and their betters in the national legislatures who, by authorizing the spending, show themselves to be persons of taste, refinement and aesthhetic sensibility—all, of course, at no expense to themselves. Have all of these people read D.H. Lawrence?—"Not art for art's sake, but not art for the people's sake either. Art for my sake."

The subsidies do not outrage the electorate because they are such a small part of government spending that no voter wold take the trouble to mount a campaign against them. Nevertheless they have a cost, and it is borne by everyone. The cost is the things that could be produced in place of the subsidized art. Some people want subsidized art, of course, and they are fortunate because they get it at a cost that is paid in good part by the majority that does not want it but still must pay for it. The effect is to take income from people who do not like art and give it to those who do, a curious redistribution. Perhaps the Maecenas's of the Arts Caucus will find a moment to reveal the principle on which they act.●

HONORING AL BARRY

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, it has been a distinct pleasure for me to work over the past few years with Al Barry, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense/House Affairs. Al has served the Department and the American people with high honor and dedication, and as he retires from that position this week, we will surely miss him in the House of Representatives.

During the many important defense debates we have had in the House I always found Al to be responsive, incisive, and responsible. As Deputy Assistant Secretary he served as the principal adviser to the Secretary and Deputy Secretary of Defense on all matters pertaining to the House and the Department, and he helped promote the mutual understanding and debate that is essential for us to reach the best decisions.

Al and I share a concern for America's future defense as well as a background in the Marine Corps. Al served 21 years of active duty including tours with all three active Marine divisions. He retired as a lieutenant colonel in 1979. In the Southeast Asia conflict, he spent two tours, first as an aerial observer, then as a battery commander, later a battalion operations officer, and finally as the assistant regimental operations officer.

I certainly wish Al well, and I thank him for the excellent job he performed at the Defense Department and for his excellent career in the service of his country.●

HAWKING DEMOCRACY

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, today we once again debate the need for, and the mischievous nature of, the National Endowment for Democracy. Last Sunday's Washington Post featured an excellent column by Mary McGrory which eloquently details why this $18 million boondoggle is not needed. I commit Ms. McGrory's column to the attention of my colleagues.

HAWKING DEMOCRACY

(By Mary McGrory)

You wonder why we have a deficit? Greedy welfare mothers? Shiftless seniors? Not entirely.

Let me explain—and I'm not even going to mention the Pentagon, which once again this week demonstrated why it will never give up the trophy for shameless profligacy. Our bold warriors paid $2,043 for a "common hexagon-sided threaded nut," which is available at Hechinger's Home Improvement store for 13 cents.

No, I speak of a much more modest assault on our common sense and our pocket books, the National Endowment for Democracy, which last year got an appropriation of "only" $31 million.

And what is NED? One of its enemies, Sen. Warren Rudman (R-N.H.) calls it "a slush fund for political hacks who like to travel to warm climates in cold weather."

And why, when we are $200 billion in the red, do we have a taxpayer-supported Club Med? Who's to blame?

It turns out that it is just everybody who counts in Washington: the president, the Congress, the Democratic Party, the Republican Party, the Chamber of Commerce and the labor unions.

The range of its sponsorship is, of course, the explanation for its survival. Reagan loyalists, to begin with, wish to nurture NED because it was his idea—floated in a London speech two years ago as an effort "to foster the infrastructure of democracy" in other countries.

This simply reflects a deeply held conservative conviction that the superior merit of democracy is a truth hidden from the rest of the world. Never mind the track record, which so copiously attests to the contrary—has anyone seen a German storming the Berlin Wall from the western side?

But just as the right is convinced that the Soviet Union is leagues ahead in armaments, it is sure that the Russians have the drop on us in the field of "winning hearts and minds."

Those not anxious to support the president have to fend off other supplicants in behalf of NED: the chairmen of both parties, lobbyists for the Chamber and the AFL-CIO, and such influential board members as Dante Fascell of Florida, Chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, from whom every colleague is bound to seek a favor sooner or later.

Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), a leading right light, is chairman of NED's board. He says that "if the NED never gets off the ground, the biggest round of applause will come from the Kremlin."

One House member, Dan Mica (D-Fla.) in artless and chilling fashion, presented NED as a peaceful substitute to the CIA, whose current way of "fostering the infrastructure of democracy" is on view in Nicaragua, where U.S. surrogates and mercenaries are shooting peasants and burning their houses down in a "covert war."

Granted that it's better to send clipboards instead of guns, don't we have agencies like the State Department and the USIA to spread the word about our excellent way of life?

NED reflects the attitude held by many in both parties that the U.S. has a God-given right to interfere in the internal affairs of other countries.

And, to the mortification of NED's friends, it turned out that that was just what NED was doing. It is not easy to find out about its activities—NED is exempt from the Freedom of Information Act, and, despite a recently proclaimed policy of "openness," closes its meetings to the public.

But, thanks to a leaked cablegram from our ambassador to Panama, Everett Briggs, we learn that the labor institute of the AFL-CIO, using $20,000 from its NED kitty, intervened in the recent, close election in Panama. The military-supported candidate, with U.S. labor sponsorship, won by 1,700 votes.

Ambassador Briggs, who doubtless spends much of his time assuring the Panamanians that the United States would never meddle in its electoral process, cabled an urgent appeal to Washington to suspend such operations "before the U.S. government is further compromised in Panama."

The House was sufficiently stirred to vote to kill NED on May 31.

But it was revived by the Senate, which was sufficiently embarrassed to authorize the cut of $10 million granted to the Republican and Democratic parties, but not enough to put the Endowment out of its miserable mischief.

Sen. Paul Laxalt (R-Nev.), who doesn't think NED has the right to exist, nonetheless voted to save it, because of "the president's commitment."

Rep. Hank Brown (R-Colo.), who with Rep. Richard Ottinger (D-N.Y.) led the successful House fight, wants to turn all its money over to Fulbright scholarships.

"People around the world don't need to be sold on the virtues of our democracy," he says. "They can't wait to find out how you do it."

But NED proves that once you have funded a foolish notion and given enough gravy to enough people, it will live forever, and hang the deficit.●

CHANGING FARM POLICY

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington report for Wednesday, August 8, 1984, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

CHANGING FARM POLICY

The past few years have been hard ones for farmers. They have had to cope with low earnings, sagging exports, and the threat of bankruptcy. Yet when they turn to federal farm programs for help, little is forthcoming. These programs, combining measures to support prices, maintain incomes, and reduce surpluses, cost the taxpayer $18.8 billion last year, six times the average annual cost in the 1970's, but they did not improve the basic situation of farmers all that much. Prospects in 1984 are better, but the problems now besetting agriculture will recur.

The basic farm law will be up for a rewrite next year. Many experts think that federal farm programs, established as they were to deal with conditions in the 1930's, have not kept pace with changes in agriculture. Some programs no longer seem capable of doing what they were set up to do—making adequate supplies of food available to consumers at reasonable prices while permitting farmers to get fair returns on their investments. Several changes in the agricultural environment are worth noting.

First, the profile of the typical farm has changed. When federal farm programs were set up 50 years ago, they applied to a homogenous system of family farms. Now we have a three-tiered system: agribusiness operations, comprising 5 percent of all farms but accounting for 50 percent of all farm products and 95 percent of all farm income; family operations, comprising 35 percent of all farms and accounting for 45 percent of all farm production; and part-time operations, comprising the remaining 60 percent of all farms, whose average net farm income is negative, whose owners work off the farm to support themselves, and whose costs can be covered only by prices two and one-half times higher than those charged by the largest farms. Second, agriculture has been integrated into the general economy. Key factors of production once produced on the farm are now produced in the city, making farms more sensitive to changes in general labor and transportation costs. In addition, many farmers have borrowed to expand their operations and improve their efficiency, and the variable rate loans that they hold leave them vulnerable to rises in interest rates. Third, farmers are much more productive today, but their ability to produce two and one-half times what they did in the 1930's has caused them to fall victim to their own efficiency. Farm production often outstrips demand and drives prices down. Fourth, low income and low rates of return on investment were the major concerns 50 years ago, but average farm income has increased from 30 percent of the non-farm level to nearly 90 percent, and return on farm resouces equals or exceeds those in the non-farm sector. The farmer's sharply fluctuating income from year to year is a dominant concern today.

These are not the only important changes to be kept in mind. Farmers today are less dependent on federal farm programs for sustenance than they have been in past years. The current farm family, for example, earns two-thirds of its income off the farm. Also, federal farm programs are less able to meet their goal of ensuring reasonable prices to consumers. This is because the prices received by farmers today constitute only one fourth of the retail food dollar. Another factor in recent years has been the high number of investors engaging in "tax-shelter" farming. The real farmer pays for this activity indirectly whenever it leads to excessive production of commodities. Finally, and perhaps most important, agriculture has been internationalized. One out of three acres is producing just for export, but as a result farm prices and incomes have become highly sensitive to events abroad—from changes in weather to shifts in the policies of foreign governments to swings in the exchange rate.

All the changes increase the vulnerability of farmers on many fronts. They have made federal farm programs less efficient and effective, and less useful to farmers than before. However, we should not be decieved into thinking that we will find a panacea in the form of a perfect federal farm program. Improvements will come as much by what we do on the larger macroeconomic questions and foreign policy questions as by what we do on the 1985 farm bill. More then anything else, Congress must come to see how decisions on matters traditionally thought to have nothing to do with agriculture can directly affect the health of the farm sector. For example, the general fiscal and monetary policies of the last 40 months have produced the greatest deficits in our nation's history, and there is no relief in sight. The deficits keep interest rates high and push up the dollar's value, adding up to 40 percent to the cost of our exports. The effect on agriculture is devastating. Controlling deficits may be the best thing the federal government can do for farmers.

There are several specific things that Congress should do. First, we must revise our price support programs, making them more market-oriented. High price supports make our crops uneconomic in the world marketplace and encourage expanded production of crops overseas. We must also make sure that both the young farmer and the family farmer are receiving their fair share of benefits from the programs. Second, we must improve our effort to export farm products. This means resisting political pressures to embargo grain sales, expanding trade by barter, fighting unfair trade practices by foreign nations, providing better credit to foreign buyers of our food, as well as resisting protectionist pressures from other sectors to avoid retaliation against our agricultural exports. Third, we must improve our domestic credit policies to make sure that the good, efficient farmer is not driven off the land during difficult times. We must change provisions in the tax code that are being exploited by nonfarmers to the detriment of farmers. Finally, we must expand scientific research in agriculture. More work on crops that need fewer expensive pesticides and fertilizers, as well as development of new crops with high convertability to fuel, could open major new markets for farmers.

While other sectors of the American economy are becoming less competitive, the farm sector retains clear global leadership. Our farmers are without equal in the world. Federal farm programs must be amended to enhance their excellence.●

MANDATORY FISH INSPECTION

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. DORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I'm introducing today a bill designed to place fish and shellfish inspection on equal footing with Federal meat and poultry inspection.

Currently, the inspection of fish is a crazy quilt of Federal voluntary control; some State inspection programs; and less-than-comprehensive Food and Drug Administration oversight. The result is the only 20 percent of the fish consumed in this country has undergone Federal inspection.

In contrast, we are all aware that meat and poultry undergo rigorous mandatory Federal inspection during processing. Over the years, this program, administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, has been extremely effective in ensuring a wholesome supply of meat and poultry. This disparity in inspection standards between meat and fish means that consumers do not enjoy the same health protection for similar food products, nor can taxpayers feel confident that the variety of agencies and standards result in economical and effective regulations.

I recently requested a Congressional Research Service study to look into what the economic and health consequences of these differing inspection standards might be. The findings of that study have convinced me that Congress should initiate a mandatory Federal fish and shellfish inspection program administered by the Department of Agriculture. Among the findings of the CRS study are:

Fish and shellfish are the only commercially-produced flesh foods in the U.S. not subject to mandatory inspection for wholesomeness. Yet, seafood is highly perishable and prone to dangerous bacterial contamination during handling and processing.

The Centers for Disease Control's report Foodborne Disease Surveillance for 1980 indicates that there were 605 food-related illnesses that year. Seventy were linked to red meat and poultry, of which the average American consumes more than 200 pounds annually. Another 70 outbreaks were linked to fish and shellfish, which have a per capita consumption of about 17 pounds (emphasis added).

The Food and Drug Administration apparently recognizes the greater potential for fish-related health problems. Its inspectors examine a far higher percentage of imported seafood than any other regulated import.

Mandatory fish inspection is an idea gaining favor with segments of the fishing industry as well. Among other groups, the presidentially-appointed National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere endorsed mandatory inspection in their 1982 report Fisheries for the Future.

I urge my colleagues to give serious attention to the need for mandatory fish and seafood inspection and to the approach my bill recommends.●

TRIBUTE TO DONNA FOSTER

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues the remarkable achievement of Donna Steele Foster, whose retirement celebration I attended last evening.

Donna Foster was born in Republic, PA, and started her career at the Veterans' Administration as a GS-2 at age 17. She continued an outstanding career of Federal service in such agencies and departments as the Internal Revenue Service, Department of the Army, Wage Stabilization Board, International Corporation Administration, and then to the Peace Corps where she was Executive Assistant in the Latin American Division working with me.

From that experience, I can testify what an extraordinarily able person she is, keeping track of some 20 programs in a dozen Latin American regions; shuttling me and the other Washington representatives to far away corners of the countries we administered; keeping in touch with training programs all over the mainland United States and Puerto Rico; and seeing to it that country directors got the backup help they needed. She was always on top of the thousands of details that are involved in these complex programs and always kept me abreast of the various crises that inevitably arise—and always managing this tense pressure with grace and good humor. She is a thoroughly delightful person.

Donna went from the Peace Corps—accompanying her husband who was in the Army—to El Paso, TX, where she worked at Biggs Air Force Base and Beaumont General Hospital. Later she and her husband returned to Washington and she went to work at the Community Relations Service, Department of Justice, and then to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, before returning to the West with her husband. When the Air Force returned Donna and her husband to Washington, she was employed at the National Urban Coalition before resuming Federal service at the National Oceanic Administration, Department of Housing and Urban Development, and the Department of Health and Human Services from which she retired on July 3, as a GS-15, to become a registered representative at First Investors Corp. in Arlington, VA, and a real estate broker.

Donna Foster has served the Government and her country well and sets a fine example of the best in our civil service.●

MAJORITY IN COUGHLIN POLL SAY PRESIDENT'S ECONOMIC POLICIES HELP NATION

HON. LAWRENCE COUGHLIN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, in sharing the results of my yearly questionnaire poll to citizens of Pennsylvania's 13th Congressional District, I note that a majority of those responding believe that President Reagan's economic policies are helping the country.

The results—tallied after the July 31 deadline—show a continuing concern with key national and international issues. In addition to a heavy questionnaire response, constitutents have followed up with letters expressing their views and offering suggestions on questions ranging from the Federal deficit to the nuclear arms race.

A total of 13,910 individual responses were received.

Questionnaires were mailed to homes and postal boxes throughout the district which includes 27 municipalities in Montgomery County, and two wards and part of a third ward in the city of Philadelphia.

Major findings of the survey are:

Fifty-eight percent believe that President Reagan's economic policies are helping the Nation while 62 percent foresee the national economy somewhat better or about the same a year from now. In a third part of the question on the economy, 50 percent indicate they are better off now than a year ago.

On reducing the estimated $176 billion Federal deficit for fiscal 1985, No. 1 choice of five presented for reducing the red ink was a 65-percent showing for cutting defense spending.

Responding to two environmental questions, a majority do not believe the Federal Government has moved effectively to alleviate the dangers of hazardous waste sites while a plurality said they'd be willing to pay more Federal income tax if the moneys were used to eliminate toxic threats to our water supplies.

An interesting division is apparent in a three-part question on our balance-of-trade deficit. A majority oppose continued protection for the domestic auto industry, but do favor quotas on imported steel where foreign firms are subsidized by their governments. A majority also oppose a get-tough policy by the United States if it means higher prices at home or a curb on our own exports.

On the critical question of arms control, two-thirds of those responding do not believe a unilateral freeze by the United States on nuclear arms modernization would result in serious Soviet Arms negotiations. A majority, however, favor a mutual moratorium on weapons testing against targets in space.

Constituents remain split over Central American policy with a plurality favoring limited military aid to El Salvador, but with a plurality opting for a cutoff of a aid to anti-Sandinista rebels in Nicaragua.

On other questions, almost 50 percent are willing to pay more taxes to maintain medical care levels for older citizens; two-thirds oppose paying more taxes to hike teacher pay in basic courses, a majority favor a flat income tax; a plurality oppose giving the States another chance to ratify the equal rights amendment; a majority approve of stiff penalties on employers who hire illegal aliens, and a majority think judges should be permitted to keep defendants accused of nonviolent crimes in jail if judges believe they may commit further criminal offenses.

As usual, I also will supply the White House with a copy of the results.

QUESTIONNAIRE RESULTS—1984

1. Continued economic growth is important to all of us.

A. Do you feel that you and your family are better off now than a year ago?

Yes	50%
No	42%
Undecided	8%

B. On balance, do you feel that President Reagan's economic policies are helping the country?

Yes	58%
No	31%
Undecided	11%

C. How do you feel the national economy will be a year from now?

Much better	7%
Somewhat better	26%
About the same	36%
Somewhat worse	24%
Much worse	7%

2. With the Federal Government deficit for fiscal 1985 estimated at $176 billion, what actions would you take to cut the debt burden? (one or more)

Raise personal income taxes	22%
Cut defense spending	65%
Reduce social program funding	44%
Adjust retirement benefits	24%

(Totals more than 100%—more than one choice available)

3. Safeguarding our environment remains a prime concern.

A. Have Federal agencies moved effectively to alleviate the dangers of hazardous waste sites?

Yes	16%
No	64%
Undecided	20%

B. Would you be willing to pay more Federal income tax if the monies were used to eliminate toxic threats to our water supplies?

Yes	47%
No	39%
Undecided	14%

4. The issue of free but fair trade with other nations grows more important as our balance-of-payments deficit worsens.

A. Does our domestic auto industry merit the continued protection of insisting on limiting the number of Japanese cars we import?

Yes	42%
No	50%
Undecided	8%

B. Should quotas be imposed on steel imports where the U.S. can prove that foreign steel exporters are being subsidized by their governments?

Yes	72%
No	17%
Undecided	11%

C. Do you favor a U.S. get-tough policy against foreign imports even if it results in higher consumer prices here or a curb on our own exports?

Yes	34%
No	52%
Undecided	14%

5. U.S.-Soviet negotiations on arms control remain stalled.

A. Do you believe a unilateral freeze by the U.S. on nuclear weapons modernization would result in serious arms conatrol megotiations by the Soviets?

Yes	20%
No	66%
Undecided	14%

B. To avoid an arms race in space, should the U.S. refrain from testing anti-satellite weapons against an object in space so long as the Soviets also refrain from such tests?

Yes	58%
No	34%
Undecided	8%

6. Our Central American policy continues to be a source of controversy and indecision.

A. Should the U.S. continue to supply limited military aid—but not troops—to the newly-elected government of El Salvador?

Yes	47%
No	35%
Undecided	18%

B. Should the U.S. cut off all aid to the anti-government forces it has been supporting in Nicaragua?

Yes	44%
No	32%
Undecided	24%

7. As our elderly population increases, would you be willing to pay more Federal income tax to maintain present levels of medical care benefits for senior citizens?

Yes	49%
No	38%
Undecided	13%

8. In response to criticisms of our educational system, would you be willing to pay more Federal income tax to increase pay for elementary and secondary teachers, particularly in basic reading, math and science?

Yes	25%
No	67%
Undecided	8%

9. Do you favor a flat rate for income taxes (10% or 15%, for example) even if it means ending major deductions such as mortgage interest, state and local taxes, and charitable contributions?

Yes	52%
No	33%
Undecided	15%

10. Should Congress again pass the Equal Rights Amendment to give the states another opportunity to vote to ratify it?

Yes	44%
No	46%
Undecided	10%

11. To prevent illegal aliens from taking U.S. jobs, should there be a stiff penalty on our employers who hire such aliens?

Yes	76%
No	14%
Undecided	10%

12. Even if they have not been brought to trial, should defendants accused of non-violent crimes be held in jail if judges believe they may commit further criminal offenses?

Yes	59%
No	26%
Undecided	15%●

THE PANAMA CANAL: 70 YEARS OF SERVICE TO SHIPPING

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, 70 years ago, August 15, 1914, American technology and ingenuity overcame enormous difficulties and converted a dream of several centuries into a reality: The construction of a canal joining the world's two great oceans, the Atlantic and Pacific.

But possibly more important than that historical milestone is the fact that the canal has been providing uninterrupted and efficient service to the maritime industry, enhancing world commerce, for that same 70 years.

This extraordinary record is a tribute to the dedication and skill of those who built the waterway and those who have operated, maintained, and improved it since then.

Far from becoming an obsolete link in the maritime transportation chain, the Panama Canal, today, is a modern transportation system that incorporates state of the art technology and has kept pace with the industry it serves so well. One of the major changes that occurred during its last decade was the new relationship between the United States and Panama that was established by the 1977 Panama Canal Treaty. The 5 years since the implementation of the treaty provide clear evidence that the agreement between the two countries is working well.

Great strides continue to be taken by the Panama Canal Commission toward improving efficiency and productivity, accomplishing key maintenance projects, and expanding essential training programs for Panamanian employees. In addition, in the past 2 years, cost reduction measures have been carried out aimed at keeping operating costs down and balancing these with revenues which had been reduced because of the world recession.

Even during the period of decline in maritime trade, the Commission has continued to take measures to improve service to users and ensure the adequate capacity of the waterway. These measures have included modernizing the tugboat fleet and other floating equipment, installing high mast, high intensity lighting at the locks to effectively extend the transit day, and channel deepening to avert restricting draft of ships.

During these seven decades, many things have changed in the Panama Canal. One important aspect, however, has not changed—the firm commitment of the canal management to transit vessels of all nations safely and efficiently between the two great oceans.●

SUPPORT FOR AN INDEPENDENT, BOARD-GOVERNED SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, last week Chairman PICKLE's Subcommittee on Social Security held a hearing on the congressional panel on Social Security organization's recommendations to establish the Social Security Administration [SSA] as an independent agency. I congratulate Congressman PICKLE for his leadership in taking the first concrete legislative step toward ensuring formal independence for SSA. I also commend the congressional panel, chaired by former Comptroller General Elmer Staats, for its comprehensive study of the feasibility of implementing such a proposal.

Witnesses at the hearing expressed near unanimity on the need to make the Social Security Administration independent from the Department of Health and Human Services. However, there was little support for the panel's specific recommendation that the independent agency be headed by a single executive appointed by the President to a 4-year term coincident with the President's term. Even the GAO stated that:

We are not confident that the Panel's solution will achieve a key goal—the effective, efficient management of the Social Security Administration. . . . It is very difficult to expect that a single administrator can carry out both a policy and managerial role given the types of management problems Social Security must solve.

By far the preferred alternative was identical legislation, H.R. 5904/S. 2778, introduced by Congressman EDWARD R. ROYBAL, chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging, and Senator DAVID PRYOR of Arkansas. I am proud to be an original cosponsor and architect of this legislation because I believe that an independent Social Security agency should be governed by a bipartisan board and administered by a professional commissioner appointed by that board for a 5-year term.

If my colleagues read through the testimony I think they will be as impressed as I am by the level of agreement among Social Security experts and administrators for more independence for Social Security. Their unanimity should motivate the 98th Congress to move as far as possible toward enabling legislation to create an independent agency governed by a bipartisan board.

Robert Fleminger, president of the National Council of Social Security Managers Association, represents almost 4,000 managers in over 1,300 Social Security field offices. He chose this topic and this hearing to present his association's first ever testimony to a congressional committee—because most of our current problems are a result of unstable cabinet level leadership and our being only one part of HHS. As a result, the National Council of Social Security Managers Association fully endorses an independent SSA along the lines proposed by H.R. 5904 and S. 2778. A board of directors, a longer term-appointed Commissioner, and independent status could again make us a great agency.

Kenneth Blaylock, national president of the American Federation of Government Employees which represents 72,000 Social Security employees, agrees with the SSA Managers Association that:

The real difficulties in Social Security are management problems—poor administration of the disability programs, for example, or bad office conditions or outdated computers. Our own experience with management has taught us that here is an organization not in control of its programs, its own resources, or budget, or its own policy.

In a June 14 letter to me, Mr. Blaylock stated that a full time board—would work to prevent the tyranny of administrative fiat by which the Social Security programs have so recently been perverted, especially the disability programs. We expect that legislation to establish an independent Social Security Administration will be a major objective of our union in the next Congress.

Ainsworth Brown, vice president of the Association of Social Security Administrative Law Judges stated that:

Due to the abuses visited upon the (appellate hearing) process, we believe that the Social Security Administration has forfeited its right to manage the hearing activity.

Judge Brown referred to the court records in the association's civil suit against the Social Security Administration to show how a single, Presidentially appointed Commissioner's "hand-picked head of the Office of Hearings and Appeals creates an unhealthy and too close relationship," which severely injures the integrity of the SSA's appeals process.

Robert Myers the Reagan administration's former Deputy Commissioner of Social Security and the Executive Director of the 1983 National Commission on Social Security Reform, testified that the layered organizational structure which includes HHS and OMB has the result that—necessary and desirable action is often delayed so long as to be useless. An outstanding example of this is the infamous notch situation in the OASDI program which could have been directly alleviated by a feasible legislative change in 1981—or even earlier—but never surfaced from the layers of review.

Mr. Myers reasserted his longstanding recommendation that SSA should be an independent agency governed by a board "who would be full time and would be appointed on a bipartisan basis."

Wilbur Cohen, Secretary of HEW during the Johnson administration, testified on behalf of the "Save Our Security" coalition and stressed the necessity of a board-governed organizational structure of SSA. His testimony was endorsed by Arthur Flemming, Secretary of HEW during the Eisenhower administration; Robert Ball, Commissioner of SSA in the Kennedy, Johnson, and Nixon administrations; Nelson Cruikshank, Special Assistant to the President on Aging in the Carter administration; William Bechill, Commissioner on Aging in the Johnson administration. They favor an independent board, in part because it would help to restore public and congressional confidence in the program.

Furthermore, the "Save Our Security" coalition stated—that if there had been a board administering the disability provision of the Social Security program in 1981, we would not have had the unfortunate recent experience with the administration of the disability program. With a bipartisan board, there very likely would have been a whistle blower on the Board who would have revealed or moderated the precipitate and uncompassionate implementation of the 1980 amendments.

Mr. Cohen went on to "endorse the thrust of H.R. 5904 . . . (and) urge your favorable support of the basic principles embodied in this bill."

The legislation introduced by myself, Congressman ROYBAL and Senator PRYOR will insulate the administration of Social Security from the arbitrary pressures too often seen over the last few years. The board governed organizational structure proposed by this legislation is endorsed by the SSA Managers' Association, SSA Employees' Union, former Secretaries of HEW and Commissioners of SSA and the beneficiaries represented by the "Save Our Security" coalition. As an original cosponsor, I ask my colleagues to join with me in urging the relevant committees to move H.R. 5904 and S. 2778 through the legislative process.●

CAROL FORBES, BEARER OF GOOD NEWS

HON. BERYL ANTHONY, JR.

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, so many times we here in Washington are accused of being unresponsive and creating fear among our constitutents with our legislative actions. I would like to bring to your attention something good that is happening in our country for a change and it originated from a former staff person of the U.S. House of Representatives. Carol Forbes came to Washington in 1972, received her doctor of laws from American University, was first counsel for the congressional rural caucus, then subcommittee counsel for our U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Agriculture, subcommittees on Family Farms and Rural Development and Dairy and Poultry. She also conceived the idea of the Congressional Clearinghouse on Women's Rights sponsored by my colleague Representative CHARLIE ROSE and was its director until 1979. Then she conceived the Farm Women's project and was its director at USDA for 18 months. Following a successful career as an independent legislative consultant and operating her nonprofit organization, Friends of Agriculture, Ms. Forbes started on a new adventure, the Good News Network.

GNN's sole purpose is to record only stories of a positive, uplifting nature for radio, TV, and the print media. They are used to counter the overwhelming negative news we see, hear and read today. We here in Congress know too well how today's press looks only for the negative in our legislative actions, rarely the positive.

GNN stories are by local people about the good things they are doing for each other on a daily basis. They do not have to be saints or experience "incredible" things to be recognized for the loving acts they perform. GNN simply records their stories in their own voices and airs them through a national sponsor/syndicator approach. In that way, by sharing good things, people will feel better about themselves, their neighbors, their communities and their world. Ms. Forbes incorporated GNN in Delaware on August 1983, then went on the road for 6 months collecting stories. Now, under her continued able leadership and management, GNN is securing a national sponsor/syndicator to underwrite the ongoing shows.

As a Member of Congress and the Agriculture Committee upon which I sat at the time Ms. Forbes worked for us, I am proud of this work being undertaken by such a farsighted person. We in America need to hear more good news. We in Congress need to support such efforts at reducing any level of fear our political actions might be producing in the minds of our constituents.

If any of your constituents have stories about the positive and friendly actions they or their neighbors are performing for each other—stories that remain unsung yet might help others to feel better about their world. please contact my office or GNN at P.O. Box 2538, Fort Myers Beach, FL 33931, (813)-463-2600.●

SUPERFUND

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, when H.R. 5640, "Superfund Extension," is considered by the full House of Representatives, I intend to offer an amendment to ensure that implementation of this important legislation follows Congress' intent in regard to the Love Canal area.

There is no question that it is essential to increase the size of the fund from its current level of $1.6 billion to more than $10 billion over the next 5 years; the growing needs of affected sites and communities must be met. There is also no question that the intent of Congress to assure fair implementation of the law has not always been met.

I am only too familiar with the excuse of insufficient funds and only too familiar with the inequities that result from previously inadequate funding of the Superfund law.

Superfund was passed in December 1980—7 months after President Carter had declared the Love Canal area in Niagara Falls, NY, an emergency area for the second time, and 2 months after President Carter and New York State Governor Carey had signed a permanent location agreement to acquire certain properties in the emergency declaration area.

Because of limited State and Federal resources available at that time, only owner occupied properties were covered by the Carter/Carey pre-Superfund relocation agreement. The Federal Government assumed that the Environmental Protection Agency would make a definitive statement on the habitability of the Love Canal declaration area within a reasonably short period of time and those property owners not covered by the 1980 agreement would be provided a fair remedy at that time.

Unfortunately, those persons not covered have waited 4 years for a definitive habitability statement, watching helplessly as the value of their holdings has steadily declined. The EPA has simply failed to meet the implicit obligation to issue a timely, definitive habitability statement. One $8 million environmental study was all but officially retracted. Presently a panel of representatives from the EPA, the Centers for Disease Control, and the New York State Departments of Health and Environmental Conservation has been established to make habitability recommendations beginning in 1985; ultimate authority for habitability decisions now rests with the State health department.

If history is our judge, recommendations and decisions will drag on well into the next decade. As the process lingers, Love Canal commercial property owners, the two area churches, owners of rental and investment properties, the Frontier Volunteer Fire Department, and owners of other property will continue to suffer and will unjustly remain the losers in the Love Canal tragedy.

In December 1983, Senator D'AMATO, Senator MOYNIHAN, and I wrote to Lee Thomas, Assistant Administrator for Solid Waste and Emergency Response. We requested $4 million to purchase these remaining properties in the Love Canal declaration area. In January 1984, I wrote to William D. Ruckelshaus, Administrator of the EPA, reiterating that request. Then, on May 10, 1984, I met with Mr. Ruckelshaus in my office to review the issues. Mr. Ruckelshaus agreed that EPA had the moral responsibility to honor the purchase. Indeed, he told me directly that the equities were on the side of the people of Love Canal. I also argued that the law provided ample authority for the administration to deal with the inequities of this case. Neither EPA nor Mr. Ruckelshaus has even denied this.

Nevertheless, on August 2, 1984, Mr. Ruckelshaus, in apparent disregard of his prior position, denied the request. He maintained that limited Superfund dollars should be used for remedial action rather than for the purchase of property from owners who have suffered severe economic hardship. His letter did not and could not deny legal authority to fulfill the Government's obligation to purchase the Love Canal properties.

My amendment calls upon the Administrator of the National Contingency Plan to establish as a high priority the acquisition of all properties in the Love Canal emergency declaration area.

H.R. 5640, including my amendment, will provide the resources so that congressional intent to ensure equity is met. I strongly urge my colleagues to approve H.R. 5640 with my amendment.●

THE CASE FOR A SUPERFUND "WASTE END" TAX

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am an original cosponsor of H.R. 5640 and a strong supporter of the bill as reported by the Energy and Commerce Committee.

The substitute title V recommended by the Ways and Means Committee, however, has a serious flaw, which Congresswoman SCHNEIDER and I seek to remedy with an amendment on the House floor.

Very simply, in the Ways and Means Committee's title V, the Congress will simply get another study of the waste-end tax, instead of a powerful new tool in the war against hazardous waste. Under the committee's bill, the Congress would have to come back in a separate piece of legislation and vote to enact a waste-end tax. To my mind we thus lose a golden opportunity to affect a bottom-line, economic incentive for firms to recycle, reuse or not produce hazardous waste in the first place.

The Ways and Means substitute basically, perpetuates the status quo as far as raising funds to finance the Superfund. And at present, what we have is a "toxic waste merry go round" where taxpayer money is spent moving hazardous waste from one Superfund site to another landfill. As recent articles in the Washington Post and Wall Street Journal have highlighted, these new landfills soon leak or otherwise fail, thus becoming the Superfund sites of future—for which of course Congress will be expected to raise even more cleanup money.

There is no such thing as a safe landfill or underground injection well. Under the Ways and Means title, however, land disposal will remain the cheapest disposal option—certainly cheaper than recycling, reuse or process changes that the waste-end tax promotes.

It is the belief of the Energy and Commerce Committee, Congresswoman SCHNEIDER and myself, that this Nation needs to create direct economic incentives to bring about positive changes in the way we—as a society—manage our hazardous waste. We are convinced that the Energy and Commerce Committee's waste-end tax will accomplish this objective and is an appropriate, effective and substantial step to avoid mortgaging our future with endless waste cleanup demands.

Regulation on top of regulation alone will not rid America of hazardous waste. All too often it simply pushed it out of sight. The Office of Technology Assessment in their 1983 comprehensive report on strategies for future hazardous waste control recommended the use of economic incentives to encourage alternative technologies to land disposal. OTA also notes that upwards of 75 percent of all hazardous waste currently going in our landfills can be recycled.

RCRA provides us with a strong regulatory system for the "cradle-to-grave" management of hazardous waste. But we believe a strong regulatory program which is complemented by a bottom-line economic incentive to produce less waste will produce even better results.

What more powerful incentive is there than one which says: Those who produce less waste pay less taxes?

Congresswoman SCHNEIDER and I as well as the staff of the Energy Committee have spent well over 1 year refining our original waste-end tax proposal into a workable, administratively feasible proposal that will provide a valuable revenue supplement to the feedstock tax.

Mr. Speaker, we should reverse the roles in the Ways and Means substitute: Let Congress demonstrate leadership and adopt a waste-end tax, instructing Treasury to report back 1 year before its effective date on any changes they feel are necessary in order to facilitate the implementation. Under the Ways and Means Committee title, the "no or go" decision is left to the Treasury. I think that Congress ought to call the shots rather than the Treasury.

Specifically, our amendment mirrors the waste-end tax structure as contained in the Energy and Commerce bill, but with some revisions. The waste-end tax would take effect January 1, 1987 and Treasury would report to Congress by April 1985—giving Congress more than a year to enact any changes necessary to the waste-end tax. This timetable is identical to the one in the Ways and Means substitute.

To keep the overall revenue target in the Ways and Means substitute the same, our amendment would replace the January 1, 1987 automatic scheduled increases in the crude oil and petrochemical feedstock tax. This automatic increase was put in to meet the $1.2 billion the Ways and Means Committee estimated the waste-end tax would raise. It was put in as a safeguard in the event no waste-end proposal is adopted by Congress by July 1, 1986.

Finally, our amendment dedicates 50 percent of all surplus revenues raised beyond the $1.2 billion target to be applied against the $2.3 billion taxpayer contribution the Ways and Means Committee has included. As both the Energy And Commerce Committee and the CBO's revenue estimates show substantially more than $1.2 billion being raised, there should be quite a bonus for taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, in our Energy Committee's version of H.R. 5640, we have crafted an integrated feedstock/waste-end tax that will provide significant advantages for our national hazardous waste disposal system. To keep it simple, it has been crafted in accordance with existing definitions and recordkeeping requirements already present under the present Superfund and RCRA laws.

It will produce a bedrock of revenue for the Superfund and also provide the economic incentives needed to move business decisions toward environmentally preferable waste management practices.

For the first time, we will put incentives in the marketplace for recycling hazardous waste and for adopting methods for not producing it in the first place. It would give corporate managers tangible, financial rewards for looking at other alternatives than land disposal.

The groundswell of public concern over hazardous waste dumps is tremendous. Ask any person on the street about how Congress should deal with the problem, and I am sure you will hear that we should be taxing those dumping the waste in our land.

Let's make it possible for the Members to go home in August and tell our constituents that we passed new Superfund legislation and that those who actually dump the waste will be taxed for doing so.●

RUTH PASSEN: AN OUTSTANDING CITIZEN OF SAN FRANCISCO

HON. SALA BURTON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Speaker, San Francisco dazzled the Nation during the Democratic Convention with its natural beauty and the hospitality of its people. The city is also the most livable of American cities, in no small part due to the tireless efforts of the people who are active in preserving and enhancing its wonderfully diverse neighborhoods. One of these people is my good friend Ruth Passen.

Potrero Hill's inhabitants share not only magnificient views of the city and bay, but a strong sense of community ties unique even for San Francisco. Ruth Passen and her family have lived and worked in Potrero Hill for many years. She is managing editor and the driving force behind San Francisco's oldest community newspaper, the Potrero View. The paper has helped unify this neighborhood, providing its people with crucial information on issues affecting their lifestyle and environment.

Ruth Passen is a crusader whose mission is to improve the lives and surroundings of the residents of San Francisco. Over 30 years ago she led a fight to save a local playground when a major street was being widened. In recent years, she has pushed for affordable housing, fought against a proposed pornography district, opposed a large electric utility pumping station in the neighborhood, and many other issues.

She recently received the Daniel Koshland Award for outstanding community work from the San Francisco Foundation. Ruth also received the Media Award from the Mental Health Association of San Francisco. Next month, I will be speaking at a testimonial dinner honoring her commitment to the community.

Ruth spends most of her time with the newspaper and community causes but also is an avid San Francisco 49ers fan—a season ticket holder since 1966—and has a deep interest in the arts—theatre, symphony, opera, museums. I am pleased to bring the accomplishments of this outstanding woman to the attention of my colleagues.●

CRITIQUE OF UNLAWFUL ACTIONS BY THE POSTAL SERVICE

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in expressing my dismay at the misguided if not unlawful position taken by the Postmaster General and the management of the U.S. Postal Service during the ongoing contract negotiations. Clearly their actions in attempting to unilaterally mandate their two-tier salary schedule for new postal employees and also reduce sick leave and other benefits of new hires indicates contempt for the collective bargaining process mandated in law and disdain for the thousands of hardworking postal employees whose efforts have put the Postal Service in the black in recent years.

We often hear officials of the Reagan administration attack what they call the arrogance of big government, yet their actions surely reflect the true situation. Obviously respect for the law and for the rights of the little people, the ordinary employee, are a very low priority for the Reagan appointees at the Postal Service. Over the last months and weeks they have repeatedly and unmistakenably made clear their determination to impose their point of view despite the requirements of the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970 and in the face of the complete willingness of the employees to bargain in good faith with them.

As our esteemed colleague Mr. FORD, the chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service pointed out in a recent letter to the Postmaster General, Mr. Bolger, "private sector labor law is clear: when an impasse is reached, management may implement its final offer. The union, however, has the concomitant right to strike, thus insuring parity of bargaining power. In this case though, the unilateral action destroys parity. The postal unions are barred from striking. The act's factfinding and arbitration procedures exist not merely as a substitute for private sector labor's rights to strike, but also as a substitute for private section's right to unilateral implementation. I believe that the unilateral changes that the Postal Service intends to implement are unlawful under the Postal Reorganization Act."

I totally agree with Chairman FORD'S assessment of the Postmaster General's proposals and hope that the Members of this House will strongly respond to this latest administration flouting of law. For despite all of their traditional rhetoric and posturings the administration should remember the words of Clarence Darrow, who once said, "True patriotism hates injustice in its own land more than anywhere else."●

SOCIAL SECURITY COST-OF-LIVING RAISE

HON. THOMAS M. FOGLIETTA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, soon the House of Representatives will be considering legislation to guarantee the Nation's 36 million Social Security beneficiaries a cost-of-living raise this January. I will be supporting this effort. Because last year's Social Security rescue package postponed cost-of-living adjustments from July 1984 to January 1985, without specific legislation beneficiaries might not receive an inflation raise for 2½ years.

When the House addressed the Social Security rescue package last year, I opposed delaying the Social Security COLA. I noted at the time that a 6-month COLA delay would reduce benefits. Although the rate was coming down then and is low now, inflation is increasing prices and the elderly, on fixed incomes for the most part, still find it difficult to keep up.

I am pleased President Reagan is supporting this effort on behalf of senior citizens. I must admit, however, to some uneasiness. After all, it was President Reagan in his first year in office who recommended eliminating the Social Security minimum benefit. And less than 1 year after Congress acted to put Social Security on a firm financial footing, it was President Reagan on March 29, 1984, who said—and I quote—"* * * what we need to do is a revamping of the program."

By supporting legislation to give Social Security beneficiaries a cost-of-living raise this January, I hope President Reagan is signaling at last his willingness to join Congress in the effort to banish what Franklin Delano Roosevelt called the "spectre of old-age destitution."●

TRIBUTE TO MR. AND MRS. JOHN COWDEN

HON. JAMES R. "JIM" OLIN

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. OLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the fine efforts of two very historically minded residents of the Sixth District of Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. John Cowden of Millboro, VA, have on their own initiative restored Fort Lewis, the 18th century plantation home of Col. Charles Lewis. Colonel Lewis gave his life at the Battle of Point Pleasant in 1774, which is widely recognized as the first battle of the American Revolution.

Fort Lewis, located in Millboro, stretches for 950 acres in a remote valley along the Cowpasture River in what is now Bath County. Colonel Lewis left his wife and four children there in August 1774, to join his Augusta County regiment at Warm Springs, VA. Soon the 13 companies of the regiment joined other units of the Southern Division and moved westward. Their destination was Point Pleasant in what is now West Virginia, where it was hoped that a united force could succeed in putting down Indian terror on the frontier.

On the morning of October 10, 1774, the Colonials were met with a surprise attack by a large force of the Confederacy of Indian Nations. During 12 hours of fighting, 46 men of the Virginia line were killed or mortally wounded, including Charles Lewis. Happily though, despite being greatly outnumbered, the Colonial troops were victorious.

These men who fought and died at Point Pleasant will be honored this year at the first of what will be an annual celebration at Warm Springs, August 24 through 26. As part of the program, the manor house that's been restored by the Cowdens will be open to the public for the first time. This restoration is a fitting tribute to the men who gave their lives in that battle, particularly Colonel Lewis who led the initial charge.

Fort Lewis occupies land which was part of the original Lewis land grant of 1742. The land grant represented the beginning of the western area of the State of Virginia. The manor house was built in 1762, and following Colonel Lewis' death, his family remained there. The property had several different owners until the Cowden family of Dayton, OH, purchased the estate in 1958. Surprisingly, the land and buildings have never been changed. It is said that if Colonel Lewis were alive today, he could return to his home and find the land and buildings exactly as they were in 1774.

The Cowdens announced their plans to renovate the manor house in 1978, and their work was finally completed earlier this year. Mr. and Mrs. Cowden and their children now live in the home, much of which has been restored with items from the original dwelling. Now that the manor house is finished, the Cowdens have begun work to renovate the old grist mill on the property.

Again, I would like to commend the Cowdens for their efforts in restoring Fort Lewis, an important historical site in the Sixth District.●

AN IMPORTANT ROWING WIN FOR THE UNITED STATES

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, we in Maine are proud of the U.S. team which won an Olympia gold medal Saturday in the women's eight-oar race, because in the No. 2 seat was Harriet Metcalf of Arrowsic.

That team, described as the fastest and toughest the United States had ever boated, won the first U.S. gold medal in any women's rowing event since female Olympia rowing competition began in 1976 and it was the first rowing gold medal for any American in two decades.

Harriet began participating in rowing while a sophomore at Mount Holyoke College in Massachusetts and has been on the U.S. national team for 3 years.

In Saturday's competition, the pressure was on the U.S. team to stop a six-race sweep by the Romanians in other women's finals.

We are very proud of the members of this team and the honor they have brought to their country. One senses a heightened national pride as the result of hosting the 23d Olympiad, in which our teams have made such a spectacular showing.●

A TRIBUTE TO CAPT. JACK GUEST, COMMANDING OFFICER OF THE COAST GUARD MARINE SAFETY OFFICE

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, on August 16, 1984, a luncheon will be held at the Reef Restaurant in Long Beach, CA, to honor Capt. Jack Guest, commanding officer of the Coast Guard Marine Safety Office, who will be retiring after many years of service.

Captain Guest, the son of a career Navy man, was born in San Pedro, CA, in 1926. He lived in many different locations until he graduated from Cour d' Alene High School, Cour d' Alene, ID, in 1944. At that time he joined the U.S. merchant marine, as an ordinary seaman. Jack obtained his third mate's license in 1948, and received his master's license in 1954. He also holds master licenses issued by the Republics of Panama and Liberia.

In 1957, Jack joined the U.S. Coast Guard as a lieutenant (jg.), under the direct commission program, and was ordered to duty on board the USCGC Pontchartrain at Long Beach. He was subsequently active in the merchant vessel and port safety programs at San Francisco, Ketchikan, San Diego, Washington, DC, and Seattle, before assignment to his current duties as captain of the port, and officer in charge at Los Angeles/Long Beach. He has also been stationed on board the Coast Guard cutters Minnetonka, at Long Beach and Klamath, at Seattle.

Captain Guest is an active member of the Elks Club, the Propeller Club, the Port Engineers, the Bilge Club, the Council of American Master Mariners, and a Seattle maritime men's club, "The Meridies."

Captain Guest is married to the former Gloria J. Young, of Wellington, NY. They have one son, Trevor. It is also good to know that Captain Guest plans to remain in the Long Beach area following his retirement. I join with my wife, Lee, in wishing Jack Guest, his wife Gloria and son Trevor, all the best in years to come. His many contributions to the Ports of Los Angeles/Long Beach will not be forgotten.●

RULE NOTICE FOR H.R. 4277

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to advise the House of the intention of the Committee on Energy and Commerce to seek from the Committee on Rules a modified open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 4277, the National Gas Market Policy Act of 1984.●

MOUNTAINEERS STRIKE GOLD

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, all Americans are filled with a special sense of pride, as we witness each evening the ultimate thrill of victory for athletes from the United States, the winning of an Olympic gold medal.

However, West Virginians are doubly proud, for each of the two Mountaineers participating in the Los Angeles games have won gold medals.

Ed Etzel, who is the rifle team coach of West Virginia University scored an incredible 599 out of 600 in the small-bore rifle competition to capture the gold medal.

Ed, a resident of Morgantown, started shooting at the age of 10, but only recently broke into the international scene. He has won two national championships and tied a world record in his event by shooting a perfect 600 during the Olympic trials.

In addition, Ed Etzel has led his team at West Virginia University to two consecutive NCAA championships.

The other gold medalist from my State, hails from Fairmont, and her impact on the sport of gymnastics will be felt for many years to come. I am, referring, of course, to 16-year-old Mary Lou Retton.

Early last week, Mary Lou was part of the American Women's silver medal winning team all-around effort. But last weekend, she alone stole the hearts of everyone when she scored a perfect 10 in the vault and a perfect 10 in the floor exercises.

As she noted in newspapers all over the world these past few days: "In the evolution of gymnastics as one of the Olympics' most popular sports, Mary Lou Retton has succeeded with a different style than previous champions—now everybody will be looking for another like her. But there will never be another quite like her. Mary Lou will always be an American original."

So Mr. Speaker, I offer my heartfelt congratulations to two fine Americans, and two great Mountaineers. Way to go for the gold, Ed and Mary Lou. You done West, by gold, Virginia well.●

MAYOR JOE WAGER

HON. HAL DAUB

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, the time has long passed since serving as mayor of one of America's smaller cities required only a good smile and a strong handshake. The demands and challenges of local government today require professionalism, leadership and the ability to solve a host of long-term and short-term problems within the parameters of a tight budget.

For the past 15 years, the city of Ralston, NE, has been served by a mayor with a good smile and a strong handshake, but Mayor Joe Wager has also demonstrated that he is an astute problem-solver, an energetic leader, and a dedicated professional.

Including his 6 years as a city councilman, Joe Wager has served the city of Ralston for over two decades—two decades that have witnessed incredible growth in Ralston and incredible changes in city government. Joe has met the challenge on every occasion, and the citizens of Ralston have endorsed his accomplishments by returning him to office so often that he is known in our area as the "Dean of Mayors."

Joe has not limited himself to the demands of the mayor's office. He has also served as president of the Metropolitan Area Planning Agency's Council of Elected Officials and as chairman of its Goals Process Committee. He has also served on its board of directors and its Policy Review Committee.

Joe's other public service includes membership on the Regional Economic Development Advisory Committee, the Papillion Water-Coordination Committee, the Omaha/Douglas County Criminal Justice Commission and the chairmanship of the Air Quality Technical Committee.

Along with his extraordinary wife, Charlotte, and their two children, David and Sheila, and their seven grandchildren, the Wager's are Ralston's first family, and though Joe has announced his forthcoming retirement, his record of achievement stands as a lasting tribute to his years of public service to our region.

It is indeed a privilege to call to the attention of my colleagues the outstanding career of this impressive public servant and fine gentleman.●

HONORING RUSS SNYDER

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, the history of our great Nation is many times written less by the acts of the Government, than by the individual acts of the American people.

Our national character, integrity, compassion, and commitment comes from the individual acts of millions of Americans who take time to help others and contribute to their communities by improving the lives of others.

I wish to take a moment to recognize a friend of mine who has fulfilled that description—Mr. Russ Snyder of Jeannette.

I recently completed working with Russ on the first Westmoreland/Fayette Council "Manpower for Boypower" dinner to aid the area Boy Scouts.

Such hard work for the Boy Scouts is not new to Russ. He was an Eagle Scout himself and an Assistant Scoutmaster and Assistant Explorer Advisor. He entered the professional service of the Boy Scouts with the Philadelphia Council in 1952 serving in various capacities. In 1969 he became executive director of the Westmoreland/Fayette Council.

This past August 4, Russ announced his retirement from the council because of a disability. But I know Russ will never stop caring for his fellow citizens and working to improve their lives as he has through Scouting.

It has been a pleasure for me to work with Russ on Scouting, and I look forward to continuing my association with him to help our area, and it is my pleasure to honor him today for the work he has done so well.●

HONORING BEL AIR, MD

HON. CLARENCE D. LONG

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, it is a great honor for me today to announce that the town of Bel Air, MD, in my district, has been awarded the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development's National Merit Certificate. This certificate of merit is only given to a very select number of local governments throughout the country that have created public and private partnerships in order to stimulate investment, revitalization, and development in their community—achieving results far beyond what Federal dollars alone could accomplish.

Through HUD's Community Development Block Grant Program, Bel Air was able to initiate a cleanup and revitalization program for Alice Anne Street, a deteriorated, low-income residential neighborhood adjacent to the downtown shopping area. As in any community effort, a number of obstacles had to be overcome. However, with the active participation and enthusiasm of local residents, the Alice Anne Street neighborhood revitalization project was able to restore vitality to the area, establishing 12 new housing units, rehabilitating eight houses, improving sidewalks and curbs, and creating a small park. The individual and collective efforts for beautifying Bel Air will always be remembered by the residents of this town as they live, work, and shop along Alice Anne Street.

I take great pride in acknowledging the endeavors of the residents of Bel Air and the spirit of cooperation that guided this project. The Alice Anne Street neighborhood revitalization project is a shining example of government and private sector working together to improve the quality of life in a community—other communities should follow their lead.●

WALTER FLOWERS: HE LOVED THE NATION HE SERVED

HON. LAWRENCE COUGHLIN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to share with the House a perceptive and heartfelt article written by a former colleague, Otis Pike, about our late beloved colleague Walter Flowers. It says something both about Walter Flowers and about the Congress that is important and expressed with an eloquence only Otis Pike could summon.

The article follows:

WALTER FLOWERS: HE LOVED THE NATION HE SERVED

(By Otis Pike)

WASHINGTON.—On April 12 in McLean, Va., a good friend died while he was playing tennis with his son. He reached down to pick up a ball and never came up. People who are supposed to know about such things say he never felt a thing.

Outside the state of Alabama, Walter Flowers was not a well-known name. He was elected to Congress easily in 1968, running as a Democrat in a Democratic district in a year when his governor, George Wallace, was running for president. Wallace was on the American Independent Party line in most states, but had the Democratic line in Alabama. Against five opponents, Flowers got 56 percent of the vote.

So here was this red-neck Dixiecrat reactionary joining the 91st Congress right?

Wrong.

One of the first things bright Yankees learn when they get to Congress is that Congress is absolutely full of bright Southerners. Dumb Yankees never learn, and they pay.

Walter Flowers had been Phi Beta Kappa. He had studied international law at the University of London. He had been president of the student government at the University of Alabama. He was a skilled and successful attorney.

He brought all that to Washington, and no one who knew him had any doubt about where he would come down when confronted with a tough issue.

He faced a tough issue in 1974 as a member of the House Judiciary Committee. There was an impeachment proceeding against a president who was very popular back home. Richard Nixon had carried Flowers' district by better than 3 to 1 in 1972. The president called Governor Wallace to intercede with Walter Flowers. Wallace declined. The president has said that's when he knew he was through. Wallace has said he didn't think a call would have changed Flowers mind.

When anyone prominent dies, newspapers get out the clippings from what they morbidly call "the morgue" and write obituaries. since most of the clippings in this case pertained to impeachment, that's what the obituaries were about. But that doesn't begin to tell you what Walter Flowers was about.

When a former member of Congress dies, someone usually says something nice about him on the floor. Rep. Lawrence Coughlin, R-Pa., organized a tribute for Flowers. That told you something. It may have happened before that a Republican organized a tribute for a Democrat, but I didn't recall it. Coughlin knew Flowers well, however, and is the sort of congressman who doesn't let politics get in his way when something ought to be done.

On May 2, 30 congressmen took the time to honor Walter Flowers, who had been out of there for six years. The ones who knew him best and loved him most didn't talk much about Watergate and impeachment. They talked about what a gentleman he was, what a leader, what a friend, and of the laughter and joy and style he carried with him.

They laughed at some of his more successful and outrageous publicity ploys (all politicians are hams). They talked about him in the gym, and of what a competitor this studious intellectual was.

Flowers had one bad campaign, in 1978. It was a Democratic primary for the Senate. It got mean and dirty. There were allegations that Walter had a loving relationship with a lady in Washington who was not his wife, which was completely true. There were charges that he had been in Washington so long that he had forgotten Alabama, which was completely false. He breathed Alabama.

He lost that election by a wide margin, and it hurt. He was deeply in debt from the campaign and his marriage was fatally wounded. If you live life hard, you get hurt sometimes, and he insisted in living every day of his life. He picked himself up and lived some more.

He got a fine job and was held up as an example of how much more money congressmen could make in the private sector. Some could. He paid off all his debts. He and his wife were divorced and he married the lovely lady in Washington.

Way back in the mid-50s, when Flowers was head of the student government, the University of Alabama was ordered by the courts to integrate. A very large and very loud contingent yelled, "Never." A crowd of more than a thousand marched from the campus to Flagpole Corner downtown. One observer described the gathering as "white-collar Ku Klux Klan."

Flowers climbed up on the flagpole's pedestal and made an impassioned speech. He spoke of the necessity of obeying the law of the land. They booed him and hissed him. He begged them not to embarrass their university or their state. They heard him, and thinned out.

Flowers never became really famous. He was one in a long line of strong, brave, decent and hard-working human beings, complete with love and laughter and strengths and weaknesses, who come from Alabama and all over this broad land and keep the nation going when famous people disgrace it.●

THE GOUGEON BROS. WEST SYSTEM SUCCESS STORY

HON. BOB TRAXLER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise before this House in tribute to an innovative and growing firm in my district. Many of my colleagues have noticed the large wood-composite blade structure now displayed in front of the U.S. Department of Energy building here in Washington. The blades are used to generate electricity and were developed and manufactured by Gougeon Bros., Inc., located in my hometown of Bay City, MI.

The wood-composite blades on display at the Department of Energy were used in Hawaii and generated an impressive 850,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity. Three other Gougeon Bros. blade systems were used in Puerto Rico, New Mexico, and Rhode Island. Together the four-blade systems generated 3.6 million kilowatt-hours of energy. Although these blade systems were developed as part of a joint NASA/Department of Energy project, Gougeon Bros. also manufactures smaller blade systems for use in the private sector, including "wind farms" in California.

The blades are 60 feet long and are composed of a wood/epoxy composite exclusively developed by Gougeon Bros. The epoxy is produced by the company under the trademark West System. Gougeon Bros. West System wood-composite work is noted for its light weight and great strength, most particularly as the material for the hulls of pleasure craft, as well as other applications.

Gougeon Bros. was established in the early 1970's and has grown from 4 employees in 1974 to 93 today, with more new jobs planned in the coming year. Considering Michigan's high unemployment rate, Gougeon Bros. deserves to be commended for its contribution to the community in creating new jobs.

Michigan brings to mind the automotive industry, but it is often not realized that our State is a leader in the development of new technologies. Gougeon Bros., Inc., is a leader in both Michigan and the Nation in field of wood composite and alternative energy technologies. I want to take this opportunity to commend their innovative work and wish them every success in the future.●

CELEBRATING THE 150TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ALLEN CHURCH IN SOUTH JAMAICA, NY

HON. JOSEPH P. ADDABBO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues, a remarkable church in South Jamaica, Queens, that this year is celebrating its 150th anniversary.

The Allen A.M.E. Church is a house of worship that has become very much the center of our Queens community. Historically, the black church has played an important role in the black community, and under the dynamic leadership of Rev. Floyd Flake, the Allen Church continues to assume this role.

During a period of high unemployment and rising interest rates, the Allen congregation created a modern day miracle by raising through their tithes, offerings, and fundraising activities more than $1 million to build a $3,800,000 school for prekindergarten through the eight grades. This money has also been used for a multipurpose educational center for various community functions.

The charismatic Reverend Flake has not only worked with church and community members to build this structure but he has also been the catalyst for expanding the membership of the church. Under Reverend Flake's leadership the members has grown from 1,400 to 3,000 parshioners. He has also been responsible for the formation of the Allen Bible Institute which provides the community with an opportunity to study the Scriptures in depth.

Reverend Flake and the Allen Church has extended itself far beyond its membership. On Thanksgiving eve, the church's outreach program provided 5,400 dinners to needy residents. In addition, the formation of the Allen Housing Corp. whose goal is to revitalize abandoned homes in Jamaica, has recently purchased 10 stores enabling us to ensure stability in our community as well as afford respectable establishments the opportunity to set up shop. The Allen Neighborhood Preservation and Development Agency also purchases and rehabilitates homes to offer our community residents affordable living space.

Other activities run by the church include a jobs referral service and free transportation for senior citizens to shopping malls, grocery stores, restaurants and banks.

Mr. Speaker, on this occasion of celebrating the 150th anniversary of the Allen Church, I take particular pride in congratulating Reverend Flake and his parishioners as they are a dedicated and constructive force in the Jamaica community. I have enjoyed working with them in the past and look forward to this continued relationship in the future.●

WOMEN'S EQUALITY DAY

HON. HAL DAUB

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, later this month, on August 26, the Nation will recognize Women's Equality Day. Great advances have been made by the women of America toward full equality, yet inequality does continue in a number of significant areas.

In 1984, 54 percent of women are working outside the home; that contrasts with 39 percent in 1965. In numerical terms, the number of women in the work force has almost doubled since 1965—increasing from 26 million then to 50 million today.

Increasingly, women are going into business for themselves. The number of women starting their own businesses increased by 10 percent between 1982 and 1984 compared to 1 percent for men. In the last decade, the percentage of women lawyers has tripled and the percentage of women engineers has quadrupled. In 1973, 18 percent of managers and administrators were women; today that figure is 32 percent.

However, the wage gap persists despite the fact that women have made impressive gains in fields dominated by men. Women average only 62 cents for every dollar men make, and over a third of families headed by women fall below the poverty line.

In the political field, women have made extradordinary advances—tripling their numbers in the Nation's State legislatures since 1969 and serving as mayors of some of the Nation's largest cities. Women hold the governorship or lieutenant governorship in four States and in recent years have broken the barriers in space, on the Supreme Court and on the Presidential ticket of a major party. Two women serve in the U.S. Senate and three in the President's Cabinet.

Special note should also be taken of the great successes chalked up by America's women athletes during the 1984 Olympics—victories that can be traced to the equality in sports mandated by title IX.

Thus, while there is progress yet to be made and barriers yet to be broken, the incredible advances made by American women in the last decade are a matter of record and have opened up a whole new world of opportunities and challenges for our daughters and granddaughters.●

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES HOUSING IN PANAMA

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which will amend the Panama Canal Act of 1979.

The purpose of the legislation is to amend section 1217(d) of the Panama Canal Act of 1979, which implemented the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977. This section of the act precludes payment of any overseas differentials and allowances to an employee whose permanent duty station is in the Republic of Panama and who is employed by an executive agency of the U.S. Government.

Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977, a number of functions and associated personnel were transferred from the Panama Canal Company and Canal Zone Government to the Department of Defense. These transfer-of-function employees, principally school teachers and medical personnel, were permitted to remain in, and continue to rent Panamanian-owned housing under the control of the Panama Canal. That right, however, was limited by an Executive agreement between our Government and the Republic of Panama to a 5-year period ending October 1, 1984.

Mr. Speaker, with the October deadline fast approaching, I have been informed by the Department of Defense that insufficient housing is available for the new transfer-of-function employees and others who may be eligible for housing support. My amendment would remedy this problem by authorizing housing allowances for these employees so that they may obtain suitable housing.

Mr. Speaker, the new allowance will be composed of the employee's annual expenses for rent and utilities reduced by the amount of rent the employee would be obligated to pay if he or she occupied U.S. Government owned or leased quarters, not to exceed the maximum amount authorized by Department of State regulations. I believe that this reduction is necessary to ensure equity between employees living in U.S. Government owned or leased housing who pay rent and utilities at the fair market value and those who will receive assistance in meeting local housing costs.

Mr. Speaker, as you may know, suitable housing in Panama is extremely expensive and beyond the means of many Department of Defense employees. Without the ability of the Department of Defense to provide adequate housing support to this group of employees, I am sure that significant loss of personnel would result and recruitment of replacements would be next to impossible.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is very significant that this legislation has bipartisan support and, moreover, is fair, equitable, and economical. A total annual outlay of only $5 million will permit our Defense Department employees to secure appropriate housing in the Panamanian economy.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all my colleagues to support this very important legislation.●

FOREIGN SALES CORPORATIONS

HON. RON de LUGO

OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleague, the Honorable PETE STARK, chairman of the Subcommittee on Select Revenue Measures of the Ways and Means Committee, in sponsoring an amendment to the Foreign Sales Corporation [FSC] legislation directing the industries seeking FSC tax benefits to locate in U.S. possessions which are outside of the country's customs territory. The proposal would guarantee that the possessions reap the economic benefits which would flow from the presence of these export companies.

The proposal is consistent with Congress' express interest in the economic health of the territories. The trade and tax incentives which the territories offer industry have had a limited success in building these offshore economies. Requiring the exporters to locate in the territories will, apart from the benefits of their FSC presence, focus industry attention on the territories. This would give the territories the boost that they need to cultivate in the industrial market.

The legislation introduced today could do more for the economies of the U.S. territories than any other single piece of legislation. I would like to thank my good friend PETE STARK for his interest in assuring that, if the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade requires U.S. exporters to locate outside of our customs territory in order to gain an export subsidy, the benefit of their corporate presence will accrue to U.S. citizens.●

IMPASSE IN POSTAL SERVICE NEGOTIATIONS

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on July 20, 1984, an impasse was reached in the negotiations over the terms of successor agreements to the national contract between the U.S. Postal Service and the four major postal unions—the American Postal Workers Union, the National Association of Letter Carriers, the National Rural Letter Carriers Association, and the National Post Office Mail Handlers. I am concerned that in light of this impasse, the U.S. Postal Service has gone forward in implementing a major bargaining matter—a 23 percent pay cut and reduction in benefits for newly hired workers. At the same time, the Postal Service is operating in the black and giving out bonuses to its management.

This action is clearly divisive and serves only to heighten tensions and lower morale. It violates the spirit of the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970, which does not permit a strike but instead envisions good faith bargaining as equal partners under the provisions of the old contract until a new contract is agreed upon by arbitration.

I urge the U.S. Postal Service and its Board of Governors to operate within the intent of the Postal Reorganization Act and both sides to reach a workable agreement.●

IN HONOR OF KOVR-TV

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend my deepest congratulations to KOVR-TV (channel 13), now celebrating its 30th anniversary of outstanding and dedicated television service to the communities of Sacramento and Stockton, CA.

KOVR-TV has progressed steadily from a small independent station that had no network affiliation to its present position as one of the three major network affiliates in the 20th largest media market in the country.

In its 30 years, the station has operated under several owners, including the Gannett Co. of Rochester, NY, and McClatchy Newspapers. In May 1980, the station was sold to the Outlet Co. of Providence, RI, now known as Outlet Communications, Inc., a subsidiary of the Rockefeller Group. The sale is worthy of notice, Mr. Speaker, because for the first time in the history of television broadcasting, the ownership responsibilities fell to two different groups—the Outlet Co. in their role as majority owners and also to a group of minority investors whose participation in the station's management represents a healthy sign of American entrepreneurship.

Mr. Speaker, KOVR-TV continues to show excellent judgment and good sense and taste in their news and entertainment programming. On behalf of the community of Sacramento and its citizens, I extend my thanks and congratulations for a job well done and my best wishes for many more years of successful programming.●

QUILTERS

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to alert my colleagues to an important piece of Americana.

First performed at the Denver Center for the Performing Arts, "Quilters" has now come to the Kennedy Center Terrace Theater.

This musical play is a moving tribute to the agony and the joy of frontier life in America. With captivating candor and sensitivity, the remarkable women of "Quilters" tell a universal story. It is an exquisite dramatic patchwork of our own heritage. We see ourselves and our own intimate history in each special block of the quilt.

Near the end of the play, the character Sarah quotes from Proverbs: "Give her the fruit of her hands and let her own works praise her in the gates." I urge my colleagues to attend this performance of "Quilters". It is a play well worth praising.●

THE SITUATION IN POLAND

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, the plight of political prisoners in Poland remains an important concern of mine. I have strongly urged the declaration of amnesty for political prisoners in that embattled country, and the present regime appears to have responded in a favorable manner.

Since there appears to be some positive signal being sent by the Polish Government, I believe it is incumbent upon us to respond in kind to their actions. One step taken, with which I agree, is to approve Poland's entry into the International Monetary Fund [IMF]. Their economic health remains poor and the suffering is placed disproportionately upon its people. By allowing the Polish economy a chance for growth and improvement, this could precipitate further granting of more liberal treatment of its people. It is important to remember that other Communist nations are members of the IMF, and this should not serve as an obstacle to admitting Poland.

Additional sanctions, which have been in place since 1981, could also be removed, further showing their efforts are not unnoticed. Easing the curbs on scientific cooperation and regranting landing privileges to their national airline are positive steps.

If we see continued progress by the Polish Government toward improving human rights and freedoms—particularly, restoration of solidarity as an independent labor movement—then additional curbs could be lifted.

It is certain that the situation in Poland will be closely monitored and further progress must be made before any additional concessions will be made. I remain optimistic the freedom loving citizens of Poland will continue with their unbreakable spirit and convince the current regime of the error in their repressive form of government.●

A TRIBUTE TO GEORGE FRANCHOCK

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in admiration and respect in calling to the attention of my colleagues the outstanding volunteer efforts put forth by a citizen of Pennsylvania's 23d Congressional District. The untiring energy and dedicated sense of purpose which George Franchock of Glen Hope has exhibited should not go unrecognized.

Over the past 8 years, Mr. Franchock has donated over 10,000 hours of his time and energy toward improving the quality of life in Glen Hope, by working in their senior citizens center, park, fire hall, and borough building. George is a very civic minded volunteer who has donated considerable time and money to such noteworthy projects as organizing a volunteer fire company, of which he is a chief, the building of the Glen Hope Fire Hall, construction of Caldwell Memorial Park, and renovation of the Glen Hope United Methodist Church. He has also served as a member of the Moshannon Valley School Board for the past 12 years.

For his outstanding personal commitment, untiring efforts, and immeasurable contribution to the quality and way of life for the people of the Glen Hope area, I salute this distinguished community leader and great American.●

SUPPORT THE FREEZE

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, Americans have always been known for their common sense. That common sense is convincing more and more of us that the best way to stop the nuclear arms race is to simply stop building new, nuclear weapons. Millions of our citizens at town meetings and on state ballots throughout the country have decided to fight the threat of nuclear war by voting to enact nuclear freeze resolutions.

This House followed their lead last year when it passed the nuclear freeze resolution. Now it is time to take the next step.

That is why I am an original cosponsor of the Comprehensive Nuclear Weapons Freeze and Arms Reduction Act of 1984. This bill would establish a mutual and verifiable moratorium between the United States and the Soviet Union on the testing, production, and deployment of all nuclear weapons. Strict verification procedures are provided for in the legislation, and the moratorium would be conditioned on strict Soviet reciprocity. We would freeze only if the Soviets followed suit. Congressional oversight is guaranteed throughout the process.

I commend this legislation to all of my colleagues as a valuable alternative to the Reagan Administration's Orwellian proposal to build down our nuclear arsenal before proceeding to a freeze and real arms reductions. Under builddown, we would retire two nuclear warheads for every new one put into service. It sounds attractive, but I oppose build down for several very simple reasons: It won't stop the MX or the Soviet SS-19; it won't stop Pershing II or the SS-20; it won't stop the B-1 or the Backfire; it won't stop the testing, production, and deployment of the D-5 missile, "Star Wars," or any new Soviet or American nuclear weapons programs.

Two-for-one builddown is no bargain. History shows how it works: When gunpowder was first invented, shrewd war planners would trade in 10 crossbows for a rifle; later on 100 rifles could be thrown away for every machine gun put into service; and Hiroshima showed that the atomic bomb has made entire divisions obsolete.

But the world has changed since 1945. Today, launching a nuclear weapon means suicide, not victory. The military sense that tells you to trade in two old weapons to make way for a more sophisticated substitute is not common sense in the nuclear age. The logic of builddown refuses to acknowledge this simple truth. Builddown does nothing to stop the rush for killer technology that fuels the arms race, and it would pave the way for a new generation of faster, more powerful and more accurate weapons.

Of course, we all want to reduce our nuclear arsenals, not simply freeze them. But a freeze agreement now offers the best hope for reductions later. It is more negotiable and easier to verify than builddown. The freeze runs the arms race into a dead end; builddown offers only a detour on the expensive road to a world where weapons are poised to destroy all we know on a moments notice.

I urge all of my colleagues to cosponsor the Comprehensive Nuclear Weapons Freeze and Arms Reduction Act of 1984.●

U.S. FOOD ASSISTANCE AND AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an article which appeared in the Wall Street Journal July 10, 1984, by James Bovard entitled "Free Food Bankrupts Foreign Farmers" and three responses to that article. Letters written by the Executive Director of CARE and a State Department official appeared in the July 27 Wall Street Journal. A letter by a representative of the Agency for International Development remains unpublished.

This statement by Mr. Bovard raises serious charges about the effectiveness and utility of what has been regarded as an important instrument of American foreign policy. I felt these charges should be answered directly by the United States.

The Wall Street Journal article and the three replies to it follow:

JULY 10, 1984.

Hon. M. PETER MCPHERSON,
Administrator, Agency for International Development, Washington, DC.

DEAR PETER: I attach for the comments and response of your Agency the attached article which appeared in the July 2, 1984 Wall Street Journal entitled "Free Food Bankrupts Foreign Farmers."

This article makes several damaging statements about the P.L. 480 programs and U.S. food assistance policies and raises serious questions about the effectiveness and utility of what has been regarded as a major foreign policy instrument of the United States. I believe a prompt and detailed answer to the charges in this article by AID is necessary.

I appreciate your consideration of this matter.

With best regards,

Sincerely yours,

LEE H. HAMILTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East.

[From the Wall Street Journal, July 2, 1984]

FREE FOOD BANKRUPTS FOREIGN FARMERS

(By James Bovard)

Food for Peace is probably our most harmful foreign aid program. Each year the federal government dumps more than $1 billion of surplus commodities onto Third World countries. This food occasionally feeds people who otherwise would go hungry, but the usual effect is to undercut poor farmers and disrupt local agricultural markets.

Food for Peace has always been a bit of a mongrel program, serving whatever purpose politicians choose at that moment. Until 1980, it gave surplus tobacco to poor countries! The program currently helps avert starvation by giving away Agriculture Department surplus cotton. Food for Peace (also known as PL 480) is jointly administered by the USDA and the Agency for International Development, and the two often quarrel.

Food for Peace originally was designed in 1954 to help the Eisenhower administration get rid of embarrassingly large farm surpluses. The original law included a cargo preference provision requiring half of all PL 480 food to be shipped in American-flag ships. This provision supposedly helps ensure a healthy merchant marine for national defense emergencies. But a 1983 Senate Agriculture Committee report concluded: "Rather than encouraging the development of improved U.S. vessels, the program encourages the continued use of semi-obsolete and even unsafe vessels which are of little use for commercial or defense purposes." Due to inflated U.S. shipping costs, cargo preference adds more than $50 million to the program's cost.

MISCONCEPTIONS ABOUT AID

Many Americans have the impression that most U.S. food relief goes to areas hit by foreign disasters or emergencies. Actually, only 14% of PL 480 food went to such areas last year, and even that aid is often counterproductive, disrupting local economies and discouraging governments from reforming destructive agricultural policies. The usual routine for other PL 480 programs, as one congressional staffer described it, is for an AID person to come into a country, find an excuse for a project and then continue it for 15 years, regardless of need or results. Many such programs have fed the same people for more than a decade, thereby permanently decreasing the demand for locally produced food and creating an entrenched welfare class.

In the 1950s and 1960s, massive U.S. wheat dumping in India disrupted the country's agricultural market and bankrupted thousands of Indian farmers. George Dunlop, chief of staff of the Senate Agriculture Committee, speculated that food aid may have been responsible for millions of Indians starving. Mr. Dunlop and Reagan administration officials insist that the program no longer puts farmers in recipient countries out of business, but the evidence does not flatter their contention.

PL 480 is still often run with the goal of giving away the most food in the shortest time. The Kansas City Times reported that in 1982 the Peruvian agriculture minister pleaded with USDA not to send his country any more rice, fearing that it would glut the local market and drive down prices for struggling farmers. But the U.S. rice lobby turned up the heat on USDA, and the Peruvian government was told that it could either have the rice or no food at all.

The same type of policy fiascos occur in sub-Sahara Africa, which received 14% of PL 480 donations in 1983. Most African governments force farmers to sell their crops to the government at a third to a half of their market value. Per-capita food production in Africa has decreased 20% since 1960, and PL 480 donations have helped governments perpetuate the destructive status quo. The easier it is for governments to get welfare, the less incentive they have to reform their own policies.

Haiti is another country wounded by U.S. free food. A development consultant told the House Subcommittee on Foreign Operations a few years ago, "Farmers in Haiti are known to not even bring their crops to market the week that [PL 480 food] is distributed since they are unable to get a fair price while whole bags of U.S. food are being sold." Where there is a sharp increase in the supply of food, prices will inevitably fall and local farmers will be hurt.

PL 480 also is often ineffective in international disasters when a speedy response is essential. People have starved while bureaucrats haggled and decrepit boats puttered across the ocean.

In 1976 an earthquake hit Guatemala, killing 23,000 people and leaving over a million homeless. But just prior to the disaster, the country had harvested one of the largest wheat crops on record, and food was plentiful. Yet the U.S. dumped 27,00 metric tons of wheat on the country. The U.S. "gift" knocked the bottom out of the local grain markets and made it harder for villages to recover. The Guatemalan government finally had to forbid the importation of any more basic grains.

PL 480 aid is divided under three titles. Title I sells food to countries at concessional prices, roughly 65% lower than market price. Title II donates food to be used for local development projects and for malnourished groups. Title III donates food but only on condition that countries are making an effort to improve their development policies. Very few countries have applied for Title III conditional aid, as they know they will get free or cheap food regardless of what policies they follow.

Roughly a quarter of Title II donations go for the Food for Work (FFW) program. FFW recipients receive food in return for working on labor intensive projects. These projects are supposed to be designed to increase agricultural productivity.

But workers often labor to improve the private property of government officials or of large landowners. An AFD analysis of FFW in Bangladesh, which has the largest number of FFW projets, concluded that FFW "results in increased inequity" and "strengthens the exploitive semi-feudal system which now controls most aspects of the village life. . . ." Workers were underpaid, and the government of Bangladesh used U.S. wheat for other purposes and paid laborers with poor quality, infested wheat. A 1975 Food and Agriculture Organization report concluded that FFW projects in Haiti "have extremely deleterious effects on the peasant communities and cause great erosion of the reservoir of mutual service relationships of the traditional peasantry."

In many areas, rural residents neglect their own farms to collect generous amounts of food for doing little or no work on government-supervised projects. FFW has, like food stamps in the U.S. contributed to a shortage of agricultural labor at harvest time.

Much of the donated food is targeted for school food or health programs for mothers and their children. AID claims that this prevents displacement of local production and reduces malnutrition. But an AID audit of targeted assistance in India, which has the largest program, concluded, "The maternal/child health program has not improved nutrition and the school feeding program has had no impact on increasing school enrollment or reducing the drop-out rate. . . ." Another AID audit concluded that "program methodology in Kenya (and elsewhere in Africa) creates an unlimited demand for food. . . . The long-term feeding programs in the same areas for 10 years or more have great potential for food production and family planning disincentives. . . ." In other countries, such as Haiti, the local AID office has never even attempted to determine the impact of PL 480 food on recipients' nutritional status.

If the USDA really believes that giving food to the poor has no effect on local farmers, then presumably Agriculture Secretary John Block would not object if the European Economic Community sent over a billion pounds of surplus cheese to feed all the hungry Americans they hear about.

Recipient governments often sell PL 480 food and use the proceeds for various doubtful purposes, such as buying arms. Mauritius insisted on receiving only the highest quality rice—and then used the donated food for its hotel trade. In other cases, food aid is squandered because of government price controls. According to one former AID official, bread is so cheap in Egypt that American PL 480 wheat is baked into loaves and fed to donkeys.

When food aid does not undercut local farmers, it often replaces food that the recipient country would have purchased on international markets anyway. One analysis found that almost 90% of PL 480 donated to Brazil simply replaced grain that nation would have purchased from the U.S. and other grain exporters. The General Accounting Office reports that many countries have deceased their commercial purchases from the U.S. while continuing to receive PL 480 handouts.

OPPOSITION IS WIDESPREAD

Not only does PL 480 hurt Third World farmers, it also helps perpetuate floundering U.S. agricultural policies. USDA price supports have led to the government accumulating a huge wheat stockpile and billions of pounds of slowly rotting dairy products. PL 480 gives congressmen a respectable-looking vehicle for disposing of the evidence of our farm policy failures.

Opposition to food aid is widespread among even liberal activists—the same groups that often favor handouts on principle. The Canadian Council for International Cooperation recommends that "except in cases of emergencies, food aid be abolished." Laurence R. Simon of OxfamAmerica, a liberal self-help development agency, concludes: "We haven't seen convincing evidence that food aid can be effectively employed as a development resource." Tony Jackson, author of "Against the Grain" and a former AID consultant, believes that food aid almost never does more good then harm, except during disaster relief.

PL 480's main beneficiaries are American farmers and the U.S. merchant marine. PL 480 has bankrupted poor farmers, encouraged the welfare ethic in recipient countries and squandered billions of tax dollars. If this is our humanitarianism, God help the Third World if we ever decide to get rough with them.

AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT,
Washington, DC, July 31, 1984.

Hon. LEE H. HAMILTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East, Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your letter of July 10, 1984, regarding the Wall Street Journal article, "Free Food Bankrupts Foreign Farmers."

On July 6, A.I.D.'s Assistant Administrator for Food for Peace and Voluntary Assistance, Julia Chang Bloch, sent a response to the editors of the Wall Street Journal. The response, which addresses the inaccuracies and errors in Mr. Bovard's article, has not yet been published in the Wall Street Journal. The editorial page staff has received her letter and has it under consideration.

A copy of that letter is enclosed. I have also included a copy of a response submitted by Dr. Philip Johnston, Executive Director of CARE, to the same article.

If I can be of further assistance, please let me know.

Sincerely,

M. PETER MCPHERSON.

JULY 6, 1984.

Wall Street Journal,
New York, NY.

DEAR SIR: The recent editorial page article by James Bovard failed to point out how the Food for Peace program has helped millions of poor people in developing countries.

Your readers deserve a fair and accurate account of the program.

Food for Peace—Public Law 480—celebrates its 30th anniversary July 10. Since its inception, while continuing to serve multiple objectives, the program has evolved, matured, and effectively addressed the concerns of Mr. Bovard. In these 30 years, the number of people dying of hunger on this planet has decreased, despite the dramatic increases in population. The United Nations reports lower infant mortality in virtually every country. The largest and poorest countries of Asia, which historically suffered recurrent famines, today enjoy relative food security. The Food for Peace program has played a major role in these developments.

From its start, the program has used U.S. agricultural abundance to help the overseas poor. As early as 1966, Congress deleted from Public Law 480, the Food for Peace legislation, any reference to U.S. surpluses, increasing the emphasis on using the program to combat hunger and malnutrition abroad.

In the 1970's and 1980's amendments to PL 480 further refined the development focus of the program, mandating (1) clearly defined self-help efforts in recipient countries and (2) careful attention to avoiding disincentive effects on the agricultural production of recipient countries.

In the 1980's in particular, the U.S. has taken the led in using food aid to help developing countries undertake policy reforms and to integrate PL 480 into the overall development strategies of the recipient countries. For example, Cape Verde, Upper Volta and Mauritania use food aid to eliminate inappropriate prices policies and other root causes of chronic food emergencies.

In Zambia, food aid has improved incentives to small farmers to increase food production, particularly corn. In Bangladesh, food aid supports an open market sales program which stabilizes prices and, at the same time, maintains a buffer stock to assure food security for this emergency prone country. India, despite Mr. Bovard's allegations, is now generally self-sufficient in food grains. Once the largest beneficiary of U.S. food aid, India produced 52 million tons of food grains in 1950; today total production is more than 133 million tons.

Increased emphasis also has been placed on assuring that food aid programs are well targetted, properly designed, and coordinated with U.S. development assistance and other donor resources. Already we are seeing the results of these efforts. Contrary to Mr. Bovard's assertions that Title II Food for Work programs benefit the elite, a comprehensive evaluation of Food for Work in India shows that 68 percent of the beneficiaries are small farmers. A recently completed study of Food for Work roads in Bangladesh documented that road construction has stimulated economic and social development throughout rural Bangladesh and provided employment to hundreds of thousands of landless laborers.

Additional evidence supports the positive impact of other Title II programs. A 1983 evaluation of the Haiti Seventh Day Adventist World Services Maternal Child Health program found significant impact on the nutritional status of severely malnourished children. Other evaluations in Sri Lanka, the Philippines, Morocco and Senegal demonstrate that food aid can effectively reduce malnutrition. A 1984 study of the School Feeding program in India suggests a positive causal relationship between school feeding and student enrollment, particularly for girls.

Food for Peace helps the people of the United States, as well as poor people throughout the developing world. It supports broad foreign policy objectives, creates new markets for U.S. agricultural products, and strengthens U.S. exports and our balance of trade. In short, Food for Peace is among the best examples of compatibility between American compassion and American productivity. Americans can be proud of the U.S. Food for Peace program.

Sincerely yours,

JULIA CHANG BLOCH,
Assistant Administrator, Bureau for Food for Peace and Voluntary Assistance.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR—DOES FOOD FOR PEACE STUNT GROWTH?

James Bovard's "Free Food Bankrupts Foreign Farmers" (editorial page, July 2) contains misconceptions regarding the Public Law 480 Food for Peace Program.

PL 480 does not, as Mr. Bovard asserts, "undercut poor farmers and disrupt local agricultural markets." When the program was initiated in 1954, recipients included Germany, France, Italy, Poland, Yugoslavia, Greece, Spain, and Norway. The program did not destroy their agricultural economies and the will to grow food. In fact, several of these countries now contribute food through the EEC for similar programs. Also, a study by Dr. H. W. Singer of the University of Sussex found that in India—long the largest recipient of food aid—"theoretical analysis gives no proof that food aid, if properly handled, has serious disincentive effects on food production."

India illustrates the effectiveness of food for work programs. In 1976 CARE introduced FFW projects there. These mostly involved soil conservation, flood protection, irrigation and school construction. Initially 235,000 recipients in hundreds of projects consumed 71,000 tons of PL 480-wheat. This program continued through 1979 and in its peak year, 1977, had 1,180,000 recipients in food for work activities that resulted in the distribution of 297,000 tons of wheat. CARE was able to end its participation when two very successful crop years made it possible for the Government of India to take over the program with its own resources. CARE's food for work programs have now been made a regular part of the Sixth Five-Year Plan. It is expected to generate 300 million to 400 million mandays of work annually.

Mr. Bovard said that the U.S. Agency for International Development in Haiti "has never attempted to determine the impact of PL 480 food on recipients' nutritional status." Actually such a study is being conducted by Joel Cotton for AID and the first phase has been completed.

Contrary to Mr. Bovard's assertion, a study by Prof. Frederick Bates of the University of Georgia showed that there was, indeed, a food shortage associated with the earthquake in Guatemala in 1976. Also, instead of grain prices dropping at the time, as Mr. Bovard claimed, prices increased. The Bates study was far more comprehensive and rigorous than the impressionistic Jackson piece cited later in the article by Mr. Bovard.

Also, far from having food "dumped" on it, India today purchases food when needed in the international commercial market and is increasingly supplying its maternal/child health program and midday meal program from its own resources. The government is scheduled to take over this program completely within 10 years.

PHILIP JOHNSTON,
Executive Director, CARE.

NEW YORK.

Public Law 480 embodies humanitarian, development, export promotion, and foreign policy objectives. These objectives have been and are being met.

Under Title I, contrary to Mr. Bovard's understanding, the U.S. provides long-term (20-40 years) credit at concessional interest rates (2% to 4%) to facilitate purchases of U.S. agricultural output at market prices by friendly developing countries. The food is sold locally, with the proceeds used to fund economic development. Since Title I generates local (often non-convertible) currencies, it is difficult to see how, without taking the notion of fungibility to absurd lengths. Mr. Bovard imagines these monies being used by governments to buy arms.

As to food production disincentives, the law requires the Secretary of Agriculture to determine that distribution "will not result in a substantial disincentive to or interference with domestic production or marketing. . . ." Title I agreements contain a series of "self-help measures," tailored to the situation of the recipient country, which spell our specific actions to be taken to foster economic development. These measures are not always easy or painless; they often encourage price decontrol, market reliance, added attention and resources to the private agriculture sector, and elimination of consumer subsidies.

Title I is highly prized by food-deficit developing countries that lack the foreign exchange to meet food needs through normal commercial imports. The food deficit might be chronic and self-reliance might be a generation away, even with the proper help. In other cases, a normally self-reliant country may need short-term help to deal with a natural or man-made disaster.

Title II donates food to the world's neediest. Even here, though, every effort is made to maximize the contribution to development of this humanitarian program.

Title III is similar to Title I, except that it calls for added policy reform or other developmental progress in exchange for a multiyear food aid commitment and forgiveness of the food-aid debt. Since the enactment of Title III, however, Title I's ecomomic development conditions were toughened, and the difference between the developmental impact of the two Titles has lessened markedly.

Mr. Bovard suggests that U.S. food aid has hampered agricultural production overseas, and that somehow, without food aid, countries would be motivated to produce more domestically. The fact is that a real hunger problem exists in the world today, which even Mr. Bovard cannot wish away.

Food aid has not prevented the dramatic increase in food production in the developing world over the past few decades. Population, unfortunately, has increased even faster. Developing countries' import needs (commercial purchases plus food aid) total about 95 million tons per year. The U.S. sells about 40 million tons to the developing world, and provides somewhat over five million tons in food aid. It is hard to argue that the five million tons is a significant disincentive to domestic production.

DENIS LAMB,
Deputy Assistant Secretary, Trade and Commercial Affairs, State Department.

CONGRATULATIONS TO A BRAVE HERO

HON. HAROLD ROGERS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to the attention of the House an outstanding individual from my district in Kentucky, who has recently been hornored for heroism.

Back on May 14, 1983, Pamela Graves was involved in a boating accident near Irvine, KY. She was clinging to a partially submerged tree about 8 feet from the bank of the swollen Kentucky River.

With the water swirling around her and threatening to drown her, a nearby farmer, Gary Freeman was alerted. He arrived on the opposite river bank, and ignoring the danger to himself, jumped into the rushing waters.

With difficulty because of the strong current, which took him off course as he swam, Mr. Freeman swam 300 feet across the river, then ran to a point on the bank near Mrs. Graves. Using a branch, he pulled Mrs. Graves to the bank and out of the river. She was then taken to a local hospital to be treated for shock, but she recovered.

At its recent awards meeting, the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission awarded a special medal to Gary Freeman of Irvine, KY, in recognition of this life-saving effort.

Mr. Speaker, such heroism is one of the things America has long stood for. This brave act, at risk to his own life, by Mr. Freeman is to be saluted by all of us.

I call upon my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join with me in congratulating and thanking Gary Freeman for his selflessness and bravery. Our world is a better place thanks to him and others who give of themselves to those in need.●

NATIONAL PORT WEEK

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, today I join with the other leaders of the congressional port caucus—Mr. HOWARD, Mr. ROE, and Mr. JONES of North Carolina—to introduce a resolution authorizing and requesting the President to proclaim the week beginning October 7, 1984, as National Port Week. This resolution—similar to resolutions passed by each session of Congress since 1978—recognizes the important role of our ports to the economic health and defense of our great Nation.

During the last several years, we in Congress have heard from the mayors and representatives of our port cities who are greatly concerned about issues such as dredging and Federal/State cost sharing. The level of activity surrounding these issues gives some indication of the contribution of our ports to the economic life of the State and local community. The willingness of the Federal Government to contribute a portion of the cost of dredging and other waterway projects underscores the importance of ports to our national defense—and to the economic health of our Nation as a whole.

Ports are directly responsible for the creation of over 1 million jobs throughout our Nation. They generate more than $66 billion in national income—and pay $12 billion in Federal, State, and local taxes. When we recall that trade amounts to 10 percent of our gross national product—and that one out of every six workers in agriculture, manufacturing, and services is dependent on trade, we realize the importance of our national system of ports through which 95 percent of our trade passes.

It is impossible to deny the linkage between trade and our ports. The 189 ports of our inland river system and the four sea coasts are the conduits through which international trade passes. Without the contributions made by the American port community, U.S. trade would still be tied to the inefficient and expensive techniques of the past.

Ports—through their commitment to expansion and intermodalism—have facilitated the growth of international trade and have assured that the cost of U.S. exports remains competitive on the world market. The expansion of foreign trade is vital to the economic health of our Nation, and ports play a major role in assuring that expansion.

We should also recognize the ports for the role they play in our Nation's security. The stability and efficiency of American ports assures peace through strength. The diversity, depth, and efficiency of our ports contribute to our Nation's defense. Our ports enable quick movement of troops and cargo from a wide range of areas.

In these times of high military spending, we should rejoice in the Existence of our ports—a vital defense resource, costing the Federal Government practially nothing. National Port Week, therefore, also recognizes the importance of our ports to our Nation's deterrent strategy.

In conclusion, I invite my colleagues to cosponsor this resolution which commends our ports and shows our appreciation to the 1 million workers who strive for excellence at our 189 inland, coastal, and Great Lakes ports.●

ROWDY GAINES BRINGS HOME THE GOLD

HON. ANDY IRELAND

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues in the House of Representatives, the excitement and pride my hometown of Winter Haven, FL, feels for Rowdy Gaines, a member of the U.S. Men's Olympic Swimming Team.

Last week, Rowdy, 25 years old and the senior member of the team won an individual gold medal for his impressive performance in the 100-meter freestyle event. He then went on to earn his second and third gold medals with strong anchor legs in the 400-meter free and 400-meter medley relays.

As did many of our athletes in 1980, Rowdy felt the disappointment and sense of disenchantment with the games when the United States made the decision not to participate in the Moscow Olympics. Rowdy seriously considered quitting his swimming career then, and again, as recently as a year ago contemplated giving up the sport.

We all owe our thanks to Rowdy who decided to stick with it—a determination, which, in this case, literally "brought home the gold."

At the conclusion of the Olympic games, Rowdy and other medal winners will tour the United States. He will be enthusiastically welcomed back to Winter Haven when he comes home in late August. His swimming career will be over. But, none of us will forget this glorious occasion in Winter Haven's history or the person who made it all possible—Rowdy Gaines.●

MEMORIAL DAY SERVICES

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, on May 28, I had the opportunity to participate in Memorial Day services in my district. This moving ceremony honoring our war veterans included such activities as the offering of a holy Mass, a parade, and the dedication of a memorial monument.

The ceremony was held by the Catholic War Veterans, Five Holy Martyrs Post No. 500, and the organizations and persons who participated included: Five Holy Martyrs Boy Scout Troop No. 485, Cub Pack No. 3465, Mr. Paul Tawech, organist and director of the Five Holy Martyrs Parish Choir, the Sea League Circuit No. 7, the Polish Highlanders Circle No. 2, the Five Holy Martyrs Parochial School Band and the Maria Lonopniczka Polish Language School.

The Mass celebrant was Father Walter Szczypula.

This Memorial Day tribute to the many brave veterans served as another reminder of the freedom we have and how many sacrifices were made to insure that freedom. The turbulent years of the Vietnam war can be laid aside, and today we can pay proper respect to those brave veterans who failed to receive the recognition upon their return.

Part of the ceremony I participated in contained the dedication of a memorial monument honoring the veterans of the Korean and Vietnam conflicts. In conjunction with this dedication, a poem was read that was written by a young helicopter pilot, Capt. Michael O'Donnell, killed in action while trying to rescue eight American soldiers in Vietnam. I would like to enter into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the poem, "A Tribute to Veterans."

A TRIBUTE TO VETERANS

If you are able, save for them a place inside of you and save one backward glance.
When you are leaving for the places they can no longer go.
Be not ashamed to say you loved them, though you may or may not have always.
Take what they have left and what they have taught you with their dying and keep it with your own.
And in that time when men decide and feel safe to call the war insane,
Take one moment to embrace those gentle

—CAPT. MICHAEL O'DONNELL.

Capt. Michael O'Donnell was a helicopter pilot during the Vietnam conflict. He was killed in action March 24, 1970, trying to rescue eight American soldiers near Dak To, South Vietnam. Captain O'Donnell was awarded posthumously the Distinguished Flying Cross, Air Medal, Bronze Star, and Purple Heart. He was 24 years old. The above poem was found in a notebook among his personal belongings.●

HERMITAGE, PENNSYLVANIA'S NEWEST CITY

HON. THOMAS J. RIDGE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, today I wish to recognize Pennsylvania's newest city, Hermitage, which became an incorporated municipality on January 1, 1984. The citizens of Hermitage are to be commended for their outstanding community spirit, and I am proud to represent them in the House of Representatives.

Hermitage is strategically located within a 1-day drive of 52 percent of the country's population, between Pittsburgh and Erie. The city is near many major routes of transportation, and its 30 square miles of land makes it the third largest municipal land area in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The citizens have worked to build excellent educational, medical, and recreational facilities, in addition to making the most of their natural resources.

Hermitage's history began with its founding in 1832, during the administration of President Andrew Jackson. The city's original name, Hickory, was derived from Jackson's nickname. The current name, Hermitage, was the name of President Jackson's estate in Tennessee.

A portion of the Erie Canal, which opened in 1844, passed through Hermitage, and one of the locks still remains. The city was the site of the first steel mill in the Shenango Valley, built by F.H. Buhl. Coal was discovered and mined during the first half of the 19th century.

Several years ago, the city received a great deal of national attention when its patriotic citizens responded to the Iranian hostage crisis by erecting one American flag for each day of the hostages' captivity. The Avenue of Flags at Hillcrest Memorial Park became a national symbol of faith and hope for the duration of the crisis. At a time when some are concerned about a decline of patriotism, the flags still fly in Hermitage.

The sesquicentennial in 1982 was a happier occasion, and now the citizens have another reason to celebrate, since the town has become an incorporated municipality. I wish to offer my sincere congratulations and best wishes.●

CONGRATULATIONS TO TECHNICAL SYSTEMS, INC., ON AWARD

HON. HAROLD S. SAWYER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, much too often we read of defense contract overruns and spare part fiascos that cost taxpayers millions of dollars and lead to a declining faith in Government.

It is with deep pride and great pleasure that I call to your attention a small company that is ready, willing and able to handle military contracts and to handle them in blue-ribbon style. This small business, Technical Systems, Inc., is a recent recipient of the Outstanding Small Business Supplier Award for 1984, presented annually by the Department of Defense.

Located in Kentwood, MI, Technical Systems, Inc., was chosen among thousands of small businesses, spread throughout Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and parts of Pennsylvania, to receive this prestigious award.

In its short 15-year existence, the highly respected firm has been judged by the Department of Defense as an outstanding military supplier with excellent capabilities in financial management, quality, timeliness of delivery, value engineering, and labor relations. Technical Systems, Inc., has also successfully participated in the Defense Department's Spare Parts Breakout Program, which further reduces abusive spending by encouraging competition among small businesses for military contracts.

I offer my congratulations to this outstanding organization, and I am sure you will agree that Technical Systems Inc., produces results pleasing not only to the Department of Defense, but to the Congress and to the American taxpayer, as well.●

SHELBY SOLOMON: A TRUE PUBLIC SERVANT

HON. BOB TRAXLER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Speaker, today, I rise to pay tribute to Mr. Shelby Solomon, a personal friend and a key advisor to the Governor of Michigan, as he prepares to leave government to pursue graduate study at Stanford University.

Mr. Solomon has ably served the people of Michigan since 1975 when fresh from earning a degree at James Madison College at Michigan State University, he joined the staff of then freshman Congressman James J. Blanchard. Mr. Solomon was first a congressional intern for Congressman Blanchard, and served as a case worker, a legislative assistant, and subsequently administrative assistant in Congressman Blanchard's office. Mr. Solomon was Jim Blanchard's principal aide during the tough months of 1979 and 1980 when the two of them spent virtually all of their waking hours guiding the critical Chrysler Loan Guarantee Act through Congress.

When Jim Blanchard ran for Governor of Michigan in 1982, Shelby Solomon served as a principal advisor during the rigorous and ultimately successful campaign. Upon Governor Blanchard's inaugural, Mr. Solomon was appointed to a variety of key positions in the office of the Governor: director of policy, assistant for strategic planning, and most recently director of personnel.

During all of these years, the members and staff of the Michigan congressional delegation and his many other friends here in Congress and in this city have come to appreciate Mr. Solomon's talents. I know that he plans to pursue his next challenge, earning an M.B.A. at the Stanford Business School, with the same diligence he has pursued all of his past responsibilities. Moreover, I hope that he intends to use what he learns at Stanford to return to public service at some time ahead. The public sector has benefited from Shelby Solomon's presence in it, and will surely benefit from his return. On behalf of his friends in the Michigan congressional delegation and in Washington, I wish him the very best and much success with his new efforts.●

SUPERFUND DESIGNED TO HELP PEOPLE, NOT BUILDINGS

HON. WILLIAM J. HUGHES

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, as the Congress considers legislation tomorrow to reauthorize and strengthen the Superfund Program to clean up hazardous wastesites, one major point should also be considered as we debate the merits of the bill, H.R. 5640. The Environmental Protection Agency's [EPA] efforts in formulating regulations that protect persons who are injured by exposure to toxic chemicals has been virtually nonexistent.

In a story published today in the New Jersey Star-Ledger, this important point was emphasized very effectively by our colleague from New Jersey, JAMES J. FLORIO, in a speech he gave to the American Bar Association's annual convention in Chicago Monday.

In the article, Mr. FLORIO makes several important observations about the American public's demand for stronger liability laws against manufacturers, haulers, and disposers of toxic products. Many of us in this Congress feel the public has a legitimate right to expect no less from its elected Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, I urge our colleagues to support passage of a strong Superfund Program tomorrow and I commend the Star-Ledger article to their attention.

[From the Star-Ledger, Aug. 8, 1984]

FLORIO SEES LITTLE EPA HELP ON LIABILITY FOR VICTIMS OF TOXIC CHEMICALS

ABA HEARS OF THE NEED FOR LAWS TO DEFINE INDUSTRY RESPONSIBILITY

(By Herb Jaffe)

CHICAGO.—Rep. James J. Florio (D-1st Dist.), in an address before the American Bar Association, cited the "virtually nonexistent" efforts of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) in formulating regulations that would protect persons who are injured by exposure to toxic chemicals.

Florio charged that as a result of EPA's "repeated failures," there has been an increase in public pressure for stronger liability laws against manufacturers, haulers and disposers of toxic products.

But he asserted there have also been simultaneous efforts by the chemical industry to weaken corrective legislation pending in Congress.

"The two conflicting efforts are being played out in different legislative contexts, but it's only a matter of time before these contradictory efforts clash," Florio told his audience of liability and insurance lawyers.

He noted that pressure to enact federal legislation that would standardize state product liability law is emerging from three sectors.

One of these efforts, he explained, developed as a result of Johns Manville and other companies which manufactured asbestos products filing or threatening to file bankruptcy petitions. Florio said the question of who would pay for the injury of workers suffering from asbestosis and related diseases was then dropped on Congress.

He explained that members of Congress began to develop proposals for an alternative compensation system to be funded by industry and the federal government.

"But the effort soon foundered on the threshold question of whether such an administrative system would preempt worker access to the courts, and it remains stuck on the shoals of that fundamental dilemma to this day," the South Jersey congressman stated.

Florio said the second effort was spearheaded in the Senate by the National Association of Manufacturers, which he said prefers a uniform national product liability law that would preempt all state laws in this area.

"Most opponents of this legislation, including most large national consumer organizations, do not necessarily oppose the concept of uniform national product liability standards. They are disturbed, however, by the content of the bill which they argue would turn the clock back," Florio said.

He added the third effort has drawn growing support in the House as a result of public exposure to "hazardous substances in the workplace, the home or, most frightening of all, from the thousands of abandoned dump sites which leach daily into our drinking water, our soil and our air."

Florio then outlined the dimension of the problem which he said has stimulated the interest of many in Congress. He alluded to a report released by a special study group two years ago that was critical of state liability laws in the toxic waste area.

"The substantial problems faced by those who must document not only how long but also how much their groundwater was contaminated by some bizarre toxic soup of chemical wastes, and then must prove the chemical soup's known effects on human health, have stymied many state court judges and will continue to frustrate the bar and the judiciary for years to come," Florio asserted.

He added, "the study group concluded that careful attention should be paid to the need to forge new legal principles so that such victims are both fairly and fully compensated for years of careless product and waste management practices which we are only now beginning to realize have taken a pervasive and tragic human toll."

Florio said that two bills which he has introduced would deal with the toxic waste victims.

One, which would amend the Toxic Substances Control Act, would establish "strict, joint and several liability for injury caused by exposure to all the chemical substances and mixtures regulated under the control act."

The second is legislation to reauthorize The superfund program, which Florio said is scheduled to be voted in the House today.

"The simple fact is that no matter how badly some may wish it, these issues will not disappear or even dissipate in the years to come," Florio stated.●

CARL PERKINS: A CONGRESSMAN FOR ALL AMERICANS

HON. JOSEPH M. GAYDOS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, last Friday, we lost a friend and colleague, the Honorable Carl Perkins of Kentucky. I know we all feel saddened by this loss. But, at the same time, we should feel great pride in the honor Carl brought to each and every one of us just by his service in the House for 36 years.

Carl Perkins stood head and shoulders above many people. His legislative accomplishments alone speak to his stature as a Member of Congress.

Yet, for all of those accomplishments, few people outside of this body and his Kentucky district knew him.

Just think of the millions of American schoolchildren who have benefited from the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; just think of the millions of American schoolchildren who received a school lunch, for some the only hot meal of the day.

Just think of the mine workers who have been saved and their families who have been helped because of Carl's insistence on passing mine health and safety legislation and black lung legislation.

Just think of all those untold millions of working men and women from one end of this great country to the other whose daily lives are better because Carl Perkins cared about them, their families and their futures.

Millions of American youth were able to receive a college education because Carl Perkins supported student aid programs, including Federal scholarships, work-study programs and student loans.

Hundreds of thousands of Americans are able to read and learn because Carl Perkins insisted on providing aid for public libraries in the rural areas of this country.

His efforts as chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, a post he held since 1967, and as chairman of the Subcommittee on Elementary, Secondary and Vocational Education insured that many of America's disadvantaged were given a chance, an opportunity to receive an education and to succeed; an opportunity they would not have had if not for Carl Perkins.

Carl Perkins was not a flamboyant Congressman. He didn't rant and rave. He spoke to America about the need to help those who were less fortunate. But he spoke quietly, knowing that right was on his side and knowing that because of that right, he could convince his colleagues; and he did, time and time again.

When I came to the Congress in 1968, Carl was already chairman of the Education and Labor Committee and I was but a freshman member of that committee. Yet, Carl always showed me the same respect he showed everyone else. He made sure that everyone was treated equally and fairly.

Today, I still serve on the Education and Labor Committee and chair the Subcommittee on Health and Safety and I am sure in my own mind that without Carl Perkins' guidance and assistance over the years, I wouldn't be as successful a Member of Congress as I am.

All of us in this body owe a great deal to Carl Perkins. He served with dignity throughout his 36 years and that dignity reflected on this body and its Members. His integrity has never been questioned and neither has his concern for America and its people.

I'm sure many of us will be asked to define Carl's greatest legislative triumph. Well, I'm not sure how I would answer such a question. In reviewing Carl's legislative record, I was most impressed by the number of measures he sponsored that became law. Many of us take great pride in introducing a lot of bills, but I don't know how many of us can match Carl's record of getting bills passed and signed into law. Just trying to list all of those would take more time than we have available.

I do know that Carl took great pride in his efforts on behalf of the Landmark Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965. And his handiwork can be counted just by reviewing the record. The subcommittee he then chaired drafted the key changes in the bill so well that only one amendment was offered and passed on the House floor and none were passed in the Senate. Carl's efforts insured quick passage and an early signing of the bill by then—President Lyndon Johnson.

His knowledge of House rules and his ability to work with his colleagues, without arm-twisting, enabled Carl to eliminate opposition to key legislation, such as the Adult Basic Education Act, which was blocked by the Rules Committee until Carl worked his magic.

In some ways it's too bad that Carl wasn't a more outspoken Member of Congress because, then, more of the Americans who have benefited from the programs he sponsored and nurtured through the House and its committees would know him and be able to pay him the honors he so richly deserves.

But, at least, we know what he accomplished over the years. We know and can take pride in Carl's work, in his efforts to insure that many deprived Americans received the benefits of this country.

I believe we all should thank Verna, Carl's wife, who allowed us to have Carl here with us in Washington even though it meant difficult times for her, Carl, and their family.

Carl has been an example to all of us. His concern for America and for Americans is second to none and his legislative accomplishments prove that time and again.

Carl Perkins was my friend and colleague. I shall miss him, his insight, his determination to keep this country great, his concern for all Americans and, especially, the children and youth of this Nation as well as its working men and women.

I am proud to have had the opportunity to serve alongside Carl in the House and on the Education and Labor Committee and to call him my friend.●

REDUCED POSTAGE ON PACKAGES TO POLAND AND THE SOVIET UNION

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to reduce by half the postage on parcels of food, clothing, and medicine sent from the United States to Poland and the Soviet Union.

This legislation is actually an amended version of a bill introduced earlier this Congress by my distinguished colleague from Michigan, Mr. TRAXLER. That bill, H.R. 4639, would allow discount postage rates on packages sent to Poland from the United States. Mr. TRAXLER's idea was a good one, and I was proud to cosponsor his bill.

H.R. 4639 was motivated by a compelling sense of compassion for the plight of the Polish people. The Poles have not only been deprived of basic human rights, but also of basic human needs, such as food, clothing, and medicine. Reports indicate widespread malnutrition in Poland, and a 30-percent decline in the standard of living since 1981. In fact, it is estimated that approximately 11 million Poles—30 percent of the total Polish population—are living at or below the subsistence level.

However, the situation in the Soviet Union, particularly for its 2.5 million Jewish citizens, is equally distressing. That is why I am introducing my bill today to broaden the discount postage proposal to include packages sent to the Soviet Union. It should be noted that the measure I am offering today was first suggested to me by Mr. Glenn Richter, national coordinator of the Center for Russian Jewry with Student Struggle for Soviet Jewry. When hearing about my cosponsorship of H.R. 4639, Mr. Richter wrote me, saying,

> As a measure of support to the tens of thousands of persons in the U.S. who send parcels to relatives and friends in Russia, and to help relieve the burden of postage—which can grow rapidly since the Soviets often return packages for no reason, and the return postage must be paid by the sender—extending H.R. 4639 to parcels to Russia would be a great help.

Clearly, we should do everything possible to encourage people in the United States to send food, clothing, and medicine to the Soviet Union because those items of subsistence are desperately needed. Consider, for example, that many Soviet Jews who apply to emigrate are routinely dismissed from their jobs and must rely on others for basic consumer goods. These packages sent from the United States, then, serve as a vital lifeline to many in the Soviet Union.

Further, it is important to note that the Soviet Government is doing everything possible to discourage packages from being sent to their country, particularly if they are mailed to Soviet Jews. Packages are often returned, at great cost to the sender, as Mr. Richter points out, or the contents are often removed before the packages reach their intended destination. Now, the Soviet Union is trying yet another ploy to discourage packages from being sent. As of August 1, the Soviet Union has banned all duty-prepaid parcels to their country. This means that the recipients, who have such meager resources to begin with, must now pay exorbitant and often prohibitive duty fees on packages that are sent to them from abroad.

Although many of us have filed formal protests with Soviet officials and with the Universal Postal Union about the Soviet Union's repressive mail policies, we are clearly limited in our ability to influence how the Soviet Union treats mail once it arrives. However, we can and must do everything possible to encourage mail and packages of subsistence to be sent. Countless reports from Soviet Jews indicate the mail and packages they receive from abroad are their only source of hope. That hope must be allowed to continue and the bill I am offering today helps make that possible.

According to the U.S. Postal Service, some 98,102 parcels were sent from the United States to the Soviet Union in fiscal year 1983. The average weight of each of those parcels was 8.1 pounds, significantly more than the average weight of parcels sent to other countries. As a result, the expenses are also more. Consider, for example, that it costs $54.90 to send a 10-pound package by airmail from the United States to the Soviet Union. Under my proposal, that cost would be cut in half, or would cost $27.45.

Similarly, it currently costs $37 to mail a 10-pound package from the United States to Poland. Under my measure, that same package would cost half as much, or $18.50 to mail.

Mr. Speaker, as the leader of the free world, we have a responsibility to do whatever is possible to make life a little easier for those repressed people who are forced to live under Soviet tyranny. Certainly, measures such as mine to encourage personal assistance between the United States and persons in Poland and the Soviet Union are consistent with that vital objective. I am hopeful this measure receives the prompt and favorable consideration that it deserves.●

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM GREER

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in recognition of the unselfishness, dedication and hard work of a resident of the Fourth Congressional District of Pennsylvania.

William Greer, a senior citizen, retired Teamster and resident of 3007 Old Pittsburgh Road, New Castle, has dedicated himself to the organization and operation of a food bank for the unemployed, disadvantaged and the elderly.

Mr. Greer, who is chairman of the Lawrence County organized labor food bank, has been instrumental in obtaining funds, supplies and necessary food for the 5,000 men and women the food bank assists.

Because of Mr. Greer's noble actions, the food bank has remained in operation for 2½ years.

Let men like William Greer set an example for us all.●

TRIBUTE TO BENJAMIN AND BELLA KLIGMAN

HON. ROBERT A. BORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Benjamin Charles Kligman and Bella Mutterpearl Kligman of 1051 Levick Street in Philadelphia on the occasion of their 65th wedding anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. Kligman were married in Philadelphia on August 10, 1919. They have two sons, Harvey and Myer, and one daughter, Sylvia Ostroff. Mr. Kligman was a very successful local businessman and both he and his wife have been active in the community. They will celebrate their anniversary with a party on August 12, 1984.

Mr. Speaker, it is a truly remarkable achievement for two people to remain happily married for so long. Mr. and Mrs. Kligman are testimony to the fact that love and understanding can still form the basis for a lifetime relationship. I am pleased to join their family and many friends in wishing them warmest congratulations and very best wishes for the future.●

UNITED STATES PROGRAM FOR DEVELOPING COUNTRIES ACT

HON. JIM WRIGHT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, today BOB MICHEL and I are introducing legislation that has far-reaching implications for our Nation's future. Companion legislation has already been introduced in the other body by Senator MATHIAS, cosponsored by Senators BINGAMAN, PERCY, PELL, BAKER, PRYOR, CRANSTON, DANFORTH, BOSCHWITZ, ZORINSKY, KENNEDY, INOUYE, MATSUNAGA, TSONGAS, RIEGLE, JEPSEN, DURENBERGER, and HOLLINGS. That legislation, S. 2768, has garnered the bipartisan support of these distinguished Senators for very good reason, and I am sure that the measure will receive the bipartisan support of House Members.

The bill we are introducing builds upon the excellent recommendation of the Kissinger Commission on Central America that the United States should provide scholarships to 10,000 deserving citizens of that region. Having served as an adviser to the Commission, I am familiar with the thinking that went into that particular recommendation. The fundamental reasoning that supports providing scholarships to Central Americans also supports the concept, embodied in the legislation I am introducing today, that the United States should provide financial assistance to deserving and promising students in other areas of the developing world as well.

The United States Scholarship Program for Developing Countries Act does just that. It directs and authorizes the President, acting through the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs of the U.S. Information Agency, to establish this Developing Country Scholarship Program.

The United States has a great deal of experience in the field of educational and cultural exchanges. In fact, the name of a distinguished former Senator is virtually synonymous with the term "educational exchange." Senator J. William Fulbright inaugurated a new era in American diplomacy and international education with the passage of the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961, also know as the Fulbright-Hays Act. Many thousands of Americans and others around the world have helped to bridge the cultural and ethnic gaps that divide people through their direct, personal experience as Fulbright scholars.

But the world has changed since 1961. That, of course, is not to say that the Fulbright program does not play a vital role in creating the basis for mutual understanding. It does. And the program deserves the continued and active support of this Congress and the American people.

But what we see in the world today calls for new initiatives and new directions that will keep pace with changing circumstances. The Developing Country Scholarship Program I propose recognizes a number of important realities.

First, while hundreds of thousands of foreign students study in the United States every year, very few of these students come from the economically disadvantaged strata. Too often foreign students in the United States represent the well-to-do, the elite of developing countries. If the United States only caters to the elites of other lands, we may find ourselves in serious trouble again and again as the winds of revolutionary change sweep across many parts of the world. In Iran, for instance, despite the fact that large numbers of Iranian students studied in the United States, our country suffered a serious policy setback. the revolution in Iran took us completely by surprise.

One reason for that may very well be that we failed to reach below the upper crust of Iranian society. We failed to understand the concerns and the sensitivities of the average citizen of Iran. Perhaps a scholarship program of the kind I propose, one that attracts the best and the brightest—but not necessarily the richest—of developing country students; perhaps such a program will enable the United States to avoid future Irans.

Another reality that this bill faces relates to the scholarship programs of the Soviet Union and its allies. For years, the Soviet bloc nations, including Cuba, have provided government scholarships in numbers that dwarf the U.S. record. In 1982, for instance, some 37,000 Africans received an education in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe completely at government expense. That same year, fewer than 3,000 Africans came to study in the United States under Government sponsorship.

We need to explore new ways to compete with the Soviet Union, but we need to do so because what we have to offer these students is superior for themselves and for their home countries than what they can get from the Soviets. And I believe enough in America to know that we do have more to offer these students. Our educational system is superior. The contributions we can make to development far exceeds what the Soviets can provide.

That's the third great reality that this program seeks to address: The need for progress in development. When there is too little to eat, when there is poverty and suffering, there is no hope. When despair takes over a country, what chance does the United States have to win respect for human rights or to gain greater acceptance of democratic ideals? The last best hope for progress in this world is education. And the United States has the resources and the responsibility, it seems to me, to make the attempt to educate as many students from developing countries as we can.

The old saying that, "If you give a man a fish, you'll feed him for a day, but if you teach him how to fish, you'll feed him for life" should be borne in mind. This scholarship program will teach promising students who could not otherwise afford a college education in subjects that are vital to their home country's development needs. It goes a long way toward teaching others how to fish, and thereby improve their country's ability to grow in self-reliance and self-esteem.

Mr. Speaker, the world is becoming increasingly complex. The world economy shifts almost daily like sand in the wind, and America will need to be sensitive to these changes. Increased exchanges with other countries is one way to do that. It enables the United States to establish long-lasting linkages with other countries through enduring friendships between people.

The House earlier this year signaled its commitment to the idea of providing scholarships to students from Latin America. The International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1984, as passed by the House, includes a scholarship program similar to the one I am proposing here today. The House authorized spending $50 million for this program. Our legislation does not authorize any specific dollar amount for fiscal year 1985, and any spending for planning and implementation of the program will be discretionary in the program's first year. Future spending levels for the program will, of course, depend upon the will of the Congress, working together with the administration.

The scholarship program we propose encourages cooperation between the U.S. Information Agency and developing country governments. The bill directs USIA to work with host governments in determining their educational requirements. In addition, coordination among various U.S. agencies and programs will be required.

For instance, it will be necessary for USIA to work with U.S missions abroad in setting up the program. The Agency for International Development and the Peace Corps should also be included in developing the program. In fact, the bill specifically requires U.S. missions abroad to consult with Peace Corps volunteers and staff in designing ways to identify deserving and promising secondary school students. This latter requirement is critical because by involving Peace Corps volunteers in the field we will be able to reach out to students at the village level who are sometimes toward the bottom of the economic hierarchy in many developing countries.●

WE NEED NOT FEAR REFUGEES

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, an American businessman, Mr. Ronald C. Nairm, recently contributed a most interesting article to the Wall Street Journal.

After the long debate in the House over the immigration reform legislation, I thought it would be useful to bring the unique perspective of this article to the attention of my colleagues in the House.

While I differ with the author on some of his points, I think that many of us need to reflect on some of the basic philosophical and moral principles which are so well expressed in this article.

"We must learn to think of people as assets again" writes Mr. Nairn and I could not agree more.

Mr. Speaker I insert the text of this article in today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Friday, July 6, 1984]

WE NEED NOT FEAR REFUGEES

(By Ronald C. Nairn)

Since the Russian Revolution refugees have formed the greatest mass movement of people; only Europe's Wars of Religion ending about 1648, provoked human movements of like proportions. In 1984, the pace has quickened—refugees number in the millions. Of these, many assume their role in seeming perpetuity.

But many in our time have escaped the refugee's fate. We might ponder their experience as we anguish over the fate of other refugees.

In the mid-1950s an incidental meeting between minor U.S. officials and a lone Thai colonel took place in the obscure town of Chiengdow in northern Thailand. The subject was refugees, specifically the larger remnants of the Nationalist Chinese army, defeated by Mao Tse-tung, who had made their own "Long March" through southern China into Laos, Burma and Thailand.

The earnest young American bureaucrats had a plan. They would help build a refugee camp for the soldiers and their many dependents. It was to be a camp complete with medical facilities, schools, administrative centers and of course, some guards, because all the officials present knew that Thailand officially restricted Chinese immigration. The Thai colonel, Kmangsak Chomanan, listened in silence. When the planners waxed most eloquent on their design, he intervened. "Never, never, never," he exclaimed. "Never will these people become refugees."

THE COLONEL'S ARGUMENT

This logic demanded explanation. "It is not the Thai way," said the colonel. Such simplicity intrigued the planners—the colonel was forced to amplify. "As of now there really is no problem. But if we lock them up and identify them with an encampment there soon will be a problem. Their countrymen to the north will have a stick (with which) to beat us Thai. And all you people will be there focusing world attention on something that does not need world attention."

"But," countered the earnest young Americans, "if you don't confine them they will scatter throughout Thailand. Within months no one will even know where they are." The American bureaucrats were as unanimous as they were certain. The colonel puffed on his pipe and said nothing.

Earlier this year I visited a village slightly to the north of Chiengdow. It was one of many villages built by former Nationalist soldiers who had been given land by the Thai government. In this village, as in many others, the Chinese soldiers had become successful farmers. They were frail, their military bearing lone gone; they still spoke Chinese. Their sons and daughters, however, worked in the fields, functioning as part of the Thai economy. In the schoolhouse, where the Thai flag fluttered in the breeze, their grandchildren chanted their lessons in Thai, sang Thai songs, played in Thai and knew no other homeland.

There was no refugee problem.

Thirty years ago, young Americans, forgetting their own history, had sought to dictate a future for those wandering, dispirited Chinese soldiers. It was a Thai colonel who intervened with the most humane solution. Yet it was this same colonel who, 25 years later, as Thailand's prime minister, announced to the world that he would drive some 40,000 Kampuchean refugees back across the Thai border, even if it were through Vietnamese minefields.

And so the refugee issue escalates. It challenges anyone who would apply a humane solution. Some 50 million Arabs cannot or will not absorb a few million Palestinians who also claim to be Arabs.

There are also the 5.5 million citizens of Hong Kong. This small enclave has achieved a remarkable prosperity, with an unemployment rate of only 1.3%, which has been threatened only recently. This economic miracle has occurred despite, or rather I would argue because, about one-half of Hong Kong's residents are refugees from mainland China. Today, all of Hong Kong, former refugees and Hong Kong-born citizen alike, nervously await their prospective new mainland Chinese masters, who are known to have a propensity to create refugees. Where can they go?

Nearly two million Afghans huddle in Pakistan. Thailand has seen more than a million refugees surge in by land and sea from Vietnam, Laos and Kampuchea. The Palestinians remain in their camps after 30 years. The U.S. looks south and wonders if it too will have its borders overwhelmed before this century ends.

Most often, the citizens of a host country view refugees as a menace: The refugees take jobs. They disturb the native culture with their strange ways. They make us feel different in our own homes and often they outcompete us and our children.

But this in not the true dynamic of the refugee problem, as most of us know even though we are fearful. As Britain demonstrated in the 19th century and the U.S. has proved throughout its history, refugees most often give their hosts more than they, the refugees, receive. Many of them are high achievers, such as scientists, writers, artists and athletes. But many of them also usually have a willingness to do work shunned by the established citizenry, immigrants built the U.S. with both muscle and brain. We, of all people, should realize they are an asset.

Why, then, do not more refugee immigrants represent an even greater asset? They do—despite the current wisdom. It is not refugees but we in the West who have changed. We are losing confidence. We lack self-assurance in handling new people. Kenneth Clark concluded his massive study, "Civilization." by stating: "It is lack of confidence, more than anything else, that kills a civilizaion."

What has gone wrong? Why can't the simple humanism of a Kmangsak or the former openness of Britain or the U.S. no longer work?

There are three reasons, each with the recurring theme that people are often liabilities.

In our time totalitarian states believe that there is room only for those they determine are candidates for their version of the "New Man," Lenn, Stalin and Hitler drove out or killed those who could not meet the criteria or opposed their notion. Mao Tse-tung carred this reasoning further by immense "reform" programs based on perpetual revolution, in which individuals conformed or fled, were exiled or were killed. More recently, in Kampuchea, Pol Pot declared that only certain people could become "new men" and to aid the transformation, all others should be exterminated as quickly as possible. To them, some people were indeed liabilities.

There is a second reinforcer of the people-as-liabilities syndrome. Every schoolchild in the West is told as an article of contemporary faith that the world is over-populated. To breed a calf or a hog or a chicken is to create an asset. But to produce another human is a liability—even if that human can create, innovate or work productively. This is a strange logic but so firmly is the idea held and so infrequently is it examined that refugees become manifestations of the menace of too many people. Under this thinking, refugees are undoubtedly liabilities.

The third promoter of the liability syndrome is more complex. Today, most Westerners believe that people are "saved" from poverty, ignorance, unhappiness and such like by institutions. Indeed, this concept now fuels one of the West's biggest industries: government. People increasingly are seen as dependents rather than as self-actualizing individuals. Western governments often justify their existence on this belief.

A PHILOSOPHICAL PROBLEM

A dependent is mainly thought of as a person who relies upon another for support, for supply of what is needed. This is exactly the status of refugees while they remain refugees. The sight of millions of them huddled in their miserable camps makes even the most well-meaning Westerner shudder as he relates it to his vision of people as liabilities.

Thus we face not so much a refugee problem as we do a philosophical one: What is the value of a human being? The answer, coming from both those who create refugees and those who face their onslaught, is about the same: "Not much."

We must learn to think of people as assets again. We may then create, as all successful societies have, not a fear of people but a need for them as is manifest by giving each of them freedom of opportunity and a share in the rewards that freedom of opportunity usually provides. This is the solution to the refugee problem. The alternative is to go on debilitating ourselves by shabby notions more typical of those who created refugees in the firstplace. Like the refugees, we become the losers.●

SERVICE TO THE ELDERLY

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, too often the unselfish efforts of those that work to improve the quality of life of the elderly go unnoticed. Today, it is my privilege to rise and honor Jayne Friedman whose commitment to the elderly in Butler, PA, stands as an inspiration to us all.

Twelve years ago, Jayne and her husband Harold, local Foodland owners, began a service transporting elderly citizens from their apartment complexes to their market. Completely financed by the Friedmans, this weekly bus service continues, stronger than ever. On account of Jayne Friedman, these senior citizens, many of whom have neither family nor transportation, maintain their independence and meet their needs.

After a personal greeting from Mrs. Friedman, the senior citizens are further aided by the employees who help them get their groceries, pack their bags, and even carry their groceries from the bus to their apartment doors.

The Friedmans provide much more than a needed service. The senior citizens enjoy not only the personalized assistance from the Foodland owners and employees, but the company of the many area residents that plan to visit with these folks as they themselves do their weekly shopping. For many of the citizens it is the only companionship they enjoy outside of their apartment complexes. The Friedmans even provide benches for the senior citizens to sit and visit.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud a compassionate woman who has made a very valuable contribution to the welfare and happiness of a very special group of citizens. To the wonderful woman who initiated this program and continues to lend her personal supervision and loving concern, I add my thanks to those of the citizens who have enjoyed this special treatment weekly for the past 12 years. I congratulate and commend Jayne and Harold Friedman for lighting up the lives of so many deserving elderly people in Butler, PA.●

THE ANGUISH OF GLOBAL HUNGER AND ARMS CONTROL

HON. JAMES M. SHANNON

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, as a world leader, the United States bears a heavyweight of responsibility on its shoulders. The hungry and oppressed peoples of the world look to us for sustenance and hope. I would like to commend to the attention of my colleagues excerpts from the text of a commencement address by Rev. Robert Drinan at the Cambridge School in Weston, Massachusetts. Our distinguished former colleague eloquently sets forth, the excerpts reprinted in the Sudbury Town Crier, our duty to commit this Nation to a path which will banish the scourge of global hunger and welcome the celebration of human rights.

THE ANGUISH OF GLOBAL HUNGER AND ARMS CONTROL

(By Robert F. Drinan, S.J., Professor, Georgetown University Law Center)

Sometimes we seem to lose any feeling for the presence of God in history when we look forward to the unbelievable changes that will come about before the year 2000 arrives.

Already there have been unprecedented movements in mankind over the past 35 years. More than 100 new nations have been born in this time—a fact clearly unprecedented at any period in human history. In addition, the nuclear bomb has been developed by at least six nations, and we see fear everywhere throughout the global village.

Indeed, it is fair to state that the 38 years of the cold war have been the most tumultuous years in all of human history

Despite the overwhelming bafflement which we may experience when we look at what might happen to the global village in the next 16 years, we simply have to face the fact that, as the Second Vatican Council wrote, the plan of God is that the church should "contribute greatly toward making the family of man and its history more human."

We have reason to be frightened and indeed terrified when we contemporate the prevalence of malnutrition, the hideousness of the arms race and the denial almost everywhere of fundamental human rights.

TRAGEDY OF STARVATION

Consider the carnage and desecration of God's gift in these statistics. Eighty million infants will be born in the Third World in 1984; 25 million of these children will die before they are 5 years old.

This country and all of humanity saw five years ago 55,000 people dying of starvation each week in Cambodia. The world was outraged and action followed. But what the world forgot was that each week at least 400,000 people die of starvation all around the world. There are at least 800 million people who are chronically malnourished—one-sixth of humanity.

The United States has been troubled by this enormous tragedy for many years. In 1961 President Kennedy set forth two goals for the 1960s—to go to the moon and to eliminate hunger within our generation. Only one of those goals has been accomplished.

In 1974 Secretary of State Kissinger said that "within a decade no child will go to bed hungry."

The most affluent nation in the world, the United States, will give only a modest sum to UNICEF this year, only 16 cents per person. Tiny Sweden will give $35 million, or $4.90 per person.

Can we continue to live with what we see? There are 42 million blind people in the world—mostly from malnutrition. The scourge of malaria could be eliminated forever by a one-time grant of $450 million. In this year of world economic recovery, 650 million school age children are not in school.

The problem will get worse in the next few years since the global population will increase from its present 4.3 billion to 6.4 billion by the year 2000—with 90 percent of the new people residing in the Third World.

Is it not shameful that the United States ranks only 15th out of 17 nations with respect to what we share of our gross national product with the underdeveloped nations? Almost everything we see concerning America's relationship to the Third World contradicts the generosity which we allege we possess as a nation.

Willy Brandt put it well in the these words: "Morally it makes no difference whether a man is killed in war or is condemned to death by the indifference of others."

The Presidential Commission on Hunger, chaired by Sol Linowitz, recommended that the alleviaton of hunger become one of the principal objectives of our foreign policy. This obviously makes sense since the possibility of global famine is one of the most dangerous threats to our national security.

THE ARMS RACE

Mankind now spends well over $1 billion each day on arms and armaments. It is totally unprecedented in history that mankind should be spending over $660 billion each year on weapons.

There are some 50,000 nuclear weapons in existence, with 30,000 being in the possession of the United States. The United States manufactures three more each day, or 1,300 per year. It is self-evident that almost inevitably a nuclear weapon will be detonated by malice, mistake or madness.

Virtually all religious bodies in America have now endorsed the statement made by the Catholic bishops of the United States that nuclear weapons may never be used.

If only 10 percent of what mankind spends for weapons were available, it would permit mankind to introduce on a vast scale scientific agricultural equipment, finance irrigation projects, construct thousands of classrooms and create vast fish farms.

Is it not time to recall once again what Pope John XXIII said on Easter Sunday 1963 in Pacem in Teris? There he openly stated that "nuclear weapons should be banned . . . it is hardly possible to imagine that in the atomic era war could be used as an instrument of peace."

HUMAN RIGHTS

The degradation of mankind by massive starvation and the threat to all of humanity by the arm race are twin evils compounded by the worldwide denial of fundamental human rights. Amnesty International calculates that there are still 40 nations that engage systematically in torture. Only about 30 of the 154 nations of the Earth have democratic structures that are consistent with the UN Declaration on Human Rights.

The United States and the other signatories of the UN Charter in 1945 pledged themselves to promote human rights. Despite that solemn promise, the United States Senate has ratified only five of the least controversial of the 19 treaties which have emerged from the United Nations.

In the recent past we have been particularly pained by the oppression of human rights in Latin America. Amnesty International calculates that there are 17,000 political prisoners in South America, with 30,000 additional people missing.

We have seen the rise of liberation theology and the hopeful signs that Latin America, where one-half of the Catholic church resides, might be moving towards a situation where finally they would have liberations from the dictators and the military governments which have plagued almost every nation on that continent. Now, however, we are told by the administration that weapons must be given or sold, not merely to El Salvador—but also to governments that are equally as lawless.

One of our greatest temptations in the months and years ahead will be the desire to escape from the world. We will want to shun the secular, avoid the temporal, withdraw into the safety of the sacristy. We will try to do all of this in the name of living as a Christian and of avoiding the profane. The shattering truth is that we run away from God if we run away from the world.

When we look at the agonies which mankind will undergo in the next 16 years, we could well ask ourselves whether or not all of the hopes and aspirations which we have for the alleviation of misery might not be a dream. But we know as people of faith and as citizens of America, that we are unique and that we have a mission and destiny not given to others. Archibald MacLeish put it well in these words:

There are those who will say that the liberation of humanity, the freedom of man and mind, is nothing but a dream. They are right. It is the American dream.

TITLE IX AND THE OLYMPICS

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, we have watched with awe this week the performance of our American athletes at the Olympic games in Los Angeles. The talent and skill demonstrated by the women representing our Nation has been particularly spectacular, as they have brought home gold medals in swimming, gymnastics, track and field, and basketball. And though the Mary Lou Rettons, the Cheryl Millers, and the Evelyn Ashfords can attribute their success to years of hard work and dedication, we should not forget the role which title IX of the 1972 education amendments played in encouraging these women to reach their goals.

Before the passage of this important statute prohibiting sex discrimination in education, boys outnumbered girls 13 to 1 in interscholastic athletics. By 1982, this ratio has narrowed to 2 to 1. In 1972, there were virtually no athletic scholarships available to women; 12 years later, 22 percent of all athletic scholarships are awarded to women. In my own State of Rhode Island, the budget for women athletics at our State university was only $30,000 in 1976. Today, it is approximately half a million. The statistics are staggering.

Yet as we stand here today, we are in danger of losing the great strides we have made in the past 12 years. The Supreme Court's decision in the case of Grove City College against Bell crippled title IX by ruling that it applied only to those programs directly receiving Federal dollars. In the few short months since this decision was handed down, 23 sex discrimination cases—aimed at forcing compliance in school athletic programs—have been dropped. Millions of American girls eager to run, swim, tumble, and dive may soon lack the facilities which their male counterparts enjoy.

This past June, this House reaffirmed its commitment to a comprehensive interpretation of title IX by passing the Civil Rights Act of 1984. Our work will not be done, however, until this important legislation is signed into law.●

DISCOURAGE BUDGET GIMMICKRY

HON. BERKLEY BEDELL

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, America faces a serious problem in the upcoming years. The Congressional Budget Office has projected that our budget deficits will range from $172 billion in 1984 to $263 billion in 1989. One of the dangers of these record high deficits is the effect upon the financial markets and the economy of Government borrowing to finance them. Even if we in the Congress take drastic measures in the next few years to reduce the deficit, we still must strive to minimize the burden of financing our ever-growing national debt for our future generations.

It was reported last Sunday, in a column by Hobart Rowen of the Washington Post, that top Treasury Department officials are discussing new ways of financing our massive deficits. These officials appear to be looking for a short term, rather than a practical solution to the dilemma. The two primary methods under discussion appear to be zero-coupon bonds and bearer bonds. While these methods would reduce current interest payments on the national debt, they will pile up the debt for future years and threaten the economic security of our children and grandchildren. In other words, there is no free lunch.

Bearer bonds will attract foreign investors to U.S. securities, but coupled with the new withholding provisions of H.R. 4170, these bonds will actually encourage foreign investors to evade U.S. taxes. The long-term consequences of zero-coupon bonds clearly outweigh their short-term political attractiveness.

It is estimated that to raise between $4 and $5 billion with a 20-year zero-coupon bond, the Treasury would have to sell $63 billion in zero-bond face value. To put this in perspective, to finance the deficit we have rung up in fiscal year 1984 alone, estimated to be $172 billion by the Congressional Budget Office, the Treasury Department would have to issue approximately $2.407 trillion in zero-coupon bonds due in 2004. And that is only to finance this year's deficit.

Today, I am introducing House Concurrent Resolution 346 which expresses disapproval with the use of these securities to finance the national debt. The resolution is short, simple, and clear on the issue. It reads in its entirety:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the United States should not issue bearer or zero coupon debt instruments.

I am taking this step to send the message to the Treasury Department that future generations of America should not be unfairly burdened with short-term solutions to the very deep and troubling realities we face today.

The articles and resolution follow:

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 5, 1984]

TREASURY SHOULD ABANDON ITS GIMMICKRY ON DEFICITS

(By Hobart Rowen)

It's been mentioned here and there in the financial press, but despite its enormous importance, the story can't make its way to the front pages: Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan and his staff are discussing novel ways of financing the huge budget deficit, including ways that will tend to cover up or reduce current outlays for interest on the national debt.

This is such a political approach to debt management that one wonders why the Mondale-Ferraro campaign hasn't started attacking it.

Stung by criticism from some technicians that these new methods will cut the interest payments due over the next several years, but pile up the debt to be paid by "our children and granchildren," as one expert put it, Regan has clamped a lid on the flow of information.

"We can't conduct these discussions in public," a Treasury information officer says. "The secretary is determined that there will be no more leaks." Meanwhile, Undersecretary for Monetary Affairs Beryl Sprinkel said this week that decisions would be announced soon, before the Treasury borrows money again on Oct. 31.

Sprinkel has been directed to head a crash effort to evaluate the possibility of issuing zero-coupon bonds, inflation-indexed bonds and bearer bonds that allow the buyer to hide his or her identity, plus other new instruments that it has not offered before. The idea is to lower—for now—the staggering interest costs of the swollen national debt.

Zero-coupon bonds pay no interest: Instead, they sell at a huge discount from face value at a price calculated to represent, at maturity, what a regular interest-paying bond would have earned if all the interest had been reinvested at the original yield. In effect, a zero-coupon bond locks in a reinvestment rate, which is good for the investor if interest rates go down. But if interest rates go up, zero-coupon-bond values plunge.

The extremely wide fluctuations have proved a hazard for investors who bought zero-coupon bonds in the private market from dealers who purchased regular Treasury issues, stripped them of the coupons, then repackaged them in their discounted, non-interest-bearing form.

If the Treasury can sell a 20-year zero-coupon bond, no payouts are required until 20 years from now, and that makes the interest payment on the national debt look better in the current and nearby years. But as Joseph E. Plocek, a zero-coupon expert at the New York firm of McCarthy, Crisanti & Maffei estimated, to raise between $4 billion and $5 billion in cash, the Treasury would have to sell about $63 billion in zero-bond face value.

Regan and Sprinkel have at least four task forces at the Treasury—legal, tax policy, monetary policy and domestic economic policy—working on the zero-coupon and related ideas.

The indexed bond raises all kinds of tax questions, Plocek points out. For example, would additional earnings based on higher inflation be taxed as regular income or as capital gains?

Perhaps the most controversial of the major new techniques being considered is the so-called bearer bond, a security for which the Treasury would not keep a record of ownership. That is an open invitation for tax evasion and cheating. This strange Treasury adventure into creative financing started with the 1984 tax legislation—signed last month by the president—which scraps the 30 percent withholding tax on Treasury bond interest paid to foreign investors.

This tax giveaway was promoted by Secretary Regan with the idea that, if foreigners didn't have to pay taxes, the United States could fob off more of its deficit financing abroad at lower interest rates than it has to pay at home. According to Sen. Robert J. Dole (R-Kan.), Regan went one step further, coming up with the bearer-bond idea. Dole, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said on Meet the Press. "It's doubtful [that] it's a good idea."

Ironically, the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 sought to choke off tax evasion of this kind. As a consequence, the Treasury since last year has issued only registered notes and bonds, which leave records of ownership. Banks and other financial institutions also have been required to tighten their records and reporting to the Internal Revenue Service, even to the point of reporting tax-free transactions.

Yet, the administration seems ready to sell bearer securities to foreigners. It is hard to see why that doesn't contravene the clear intent of Congress to close down, rather than open up, new tax evasion schemes.

"There's an element here of financial nationalism," economist Henry Kaufman commented. "We are attracting funds from abroad. Meanwhile, we hold down the rate of inflation by importing a lot of goods. Our large fiscal expansion and high interest rates exact a penalty on the rest of the world. This policy can't last forever."

The Reagan administration ought to put away the zero-coupon and bearer-bond gimmickry, and redirect its efforts to cutting the deficit in the old-fashioned, and only sound, way: by reducing unnecessary military and civilian spending where it can, and supplementing that effort with a solid tax increase.

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 8, 1984]

SOLICITING TAX EVASION

In a conspicuous display of poor judgment the Treasury Department is considering whether to sell, overseas, a type of security known as a bearer bond. Most government bonds are registered in the name of the holder. That makes it less inviting to steal them, but it also means that the government knows who's collecting the interest. A bearer bond is unregistered. The government simply pays the person who has possession of it—the bearer. The Treasury is attracted by the thought that foreign buyers might bid higher for bearer bonds than for the conventional sort. Why do you suppose investors might pay a premium for anonymity?

It is grotesque that the Treasury should entertain this blatant solicitation to tax evasion. When the idea began to take shape in mid-July, Sen. Robert Dole, the chairman of the Finance Committee, wrote to Secretary Donald T. Regan expressing his concern at a "perceived collusion by the U.S. Treasury with tax evaders." Sen. John H. Chafee and, in the House, Rep. Doug Barnard wrote similar letters. None of them has received an answer. The Treasury still hasn't made up its mind.

The administration seems to assume that, since the buyers would be foreigners, they would only be evading other countries' taxes. That's far from clear. Since the purchasers would be anonymous, as Sen. Dole pointed out, it will be impossible for the Treasury to know whether they are being sold—or resold—to Americans.

But if the logic of this scheme is weak, the moral implications are worse. At a time when money is becoming increasingly mobile, every government in the world is having trouble with tax evasion. They can control it only to the extent that they are prepared to work together. The United States has recently been having a degree of real success in its campaign to pry open the records of some of the Caribbean tax havens and even to coax a measure of cooperation from the Swiss banking authorities. This progress would be undercut by resorting now to bearer bonds.

Why does the Treasury continue to contemplate such an obviously bad idea? Perhaps the administration is getting anxious about its ability to keep drawing in money from abroad. The Reagan economic policy is pushing this country into increasing dependence on an inflow of foreign capital—from a modest $11 billion in 1982 to an unprecedented $41 billion in 1983 to something over $800 billion this year. You are entitled to doubt that this kind of geometric progression can continue much longer. Perhaps the Treasury Department is beginning to feel a strain sufficiently severe to press it toward expedients even as dubious as bearer bonds.

H. CON. RES. 346

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the United States should not issue bearer or zero coupon debt instruments.●

SALUTE TO CAL STATE SAN BERNARDINO

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate the San Bernardino campus of the Cal State University system. After 20 years of preparing students for graduation, the campus itself has come of age by graduating to the status of university.

In order to be awarded this distinction, the campus has worked hard to meet strict California education standards. Campus recruiters have boosted school enrollment from the modest 257 original students to the current 5,400. In order to change its name from "college" to "university" it is required to graduate 150 masters degrees a year; Cal State awarded 233. Another requirement is that one half the faculty must have doctorate degrees; at this campus over 70 percent hold that distinction.

Cal State San Bernardino meets a special need in my district by offering a full evening program, allowing for continuing education at every level—from high school graduate to working professional. In an age of high technology and constant change, we must all prepare ourselves for new careers and new directions.

I salute this campus for helping to fulfill this need, and I congratulate them for accepting the challenge to meet new goals and strive for excellence.●

TENNESSEAN COACHES WOMEN TO GOLD

HON. DON SUNDQUIST

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Speaker, last night the USA women's basketball team won the gold medal at the games of the XXIII Olympiad in Los Angeles by defeating South Korea 85-55. This was the first time in Olympic history that an American women's basketball team has achieved such an accomplishment.

I am proud to say that the coach for our women's Olympic basketball team, Pat Head Summitt, is a native of the State of Tennessee and of Cheatham County in my congressional district.

Coach Summitt and her players are to be commended for their outstanding record of six wins and no losses.

Since here days as a silver medalist on the 1976 women's basketball team in Montreal, Coach Summitt has been a very successful coach at the University of Tennessee, where her teams have frequently made it to the final four and played for the national championship numerous times in recent years. She was an assistant Olympic coach for the 1980 team that was unable to go to Moscow because of the boycott. Because of last night's victory, Coach Summitt will be the only woman in the world who has won medals both as a coach and player.

Today, our country and the State of Tennessee can be very proud of the association that Pat Head Summitt has had with our women's Olympic basketball teams. Because of her dedication, enthusiasm, and spirit of competitiveness, Coach Summitt is to be commended for her fine example on and off the basketball court.●

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE ALICE HILLELSON

HON. LARRY WINN, JR.

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. WINN. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow that I bring to the attention of my colleagues the death on August 2 of Alice Hillelson, wife of our friend and former colleague from Kansas City, MO, Jeffrey Hillelson. I know that many of my fellow Members will want to join with Joan and me in expressing our condolences to Jeff.

Although Jeff served only a short time in the House, he and Alice established and maintained many friendships among his colleagues. Many of us recall fondly Alice's graciousness, warmth, and support for her husband's career. Alice was deeply concerned for others, serving in many Kansas City community organizations. Her activities included work in special education, the Junior League, and the Greater Kansas City Urban League. Alice also shared Jeff's interest in politics, serving most recently as a delegate to the 1980 Republican National Convention. While she was deeply involved in public life, Alice was always a superb wife to Jeff and a supportive mother of their two children.

Again, I know my colleagues will want to join with me in expressing our concern and sympathy to the Hillelson family in this special time of sorrow.●

OLYMPIC CHAMPION CINDY NOBLE

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate Cindy Noble of Clarksburg, OH, and all the members and coaches of the U.S. Women's Basketball Team on winning the Gold Medal last night at the 23d Olympics in Los Angeles.

I know that Cindy's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Noble of Clarksburg, have waited a long time for this. Cindy made the U.S. Olympic Team in 1980 which, of course, did not compete because of the boycott. This made last night's victory even more satisfying.

Cindy's effort was olympian. She was third highest scorer last night with 10 points on three for five from the field and four out of five from the free-throw line.

In winning the Gold Medal, Cindy Noble and the U.S. Women's Basketball Team proved once again that the American doctrine of dedication, commitment, and teamwork does pay off.

Again, on behalf of the citizens of southern Ohio, I extend our congratulations and best wishes for the future to our own Cindy Noble and the entire team.●

ORGAN TRANSPORTATION GOOD SAMARITAN ACT

HON. MICHAEL A. ANDREWS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. ANDREWS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to protect and limit the liability of persons who without compensation transport in interstate commerce and by air human organs.

The bill follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Organ Transportation Good Samaritan Act".

SEC. 2. Any person who engages voluntarily and without compensation in air transportation in interstate commerce of a human organ for the purpose of assisting a recipient of a human organ transportation shall not be liable under any State law for injury, harm, or death to such recipient, the donor of the human organ, or the heirs, successors, or assigns of the recipient or donor resulting from direct or indirect damage to the human organ while being transported by such person unless the damage is the result of the gross negligence of such person.●

YEAR OF THE OCEAN

HON. DENNY SMITH

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to recognize 1984 as the Year of the Ocean. Special events are planned throughout the country to focus attention on the Nation's aquatic and marine resources and the essential role of the sea in the life and future of our Nation. Celebrations in Oregon include receptions, proclamation ceremonies, film festivals, poster contests, workshops, and trips, all designed to call attention to the special contribution the ocean makes to our lives.

Oregon's commitment to gaining a better understanding is exemplified in Newport, home of one of this Nation's finest programs in marine biology. Oregon State University's program in oceanography attracts students from across the country to the beautiful Newport environment, where students take advantage of Oregon's rich coastal marine life and receive fine academic training.

As our country has grown, our ties to the sea have assumed greater importance. In this era of shrinking natural resources, people are looking beyond our earthbound territories to the ocean to play a critical part in planning for our future. The demands for the ocean's vast bounty will naturally grow. We use products that are derived from the sea, transport products over the sea, and produce resources from the sea. We have come to depend upon the ocean and coastal zone for the extraction of fossil fuels and mineral resources, for the placement of facilities to generate energy, and for fishery resources.

The Year of the Ocean provides an excellent opportunity to examine our ocean heritage and foster greater awareness of our need to live in harmony with the ocean.●

TRADE DEFICIT HEARINGS

HON. DON BONKER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, this Nation faces a staggering deficit in its international balance of trade. When the current administration took office in 1981, our balance of trade was positive. By last year, however, it had plunged to a record $70 million deficit, and at the rate we are going we will have a further deficit of $126 billion by the end of 1984. Even our so-called current account balance, which includes remittances from tourism, our investments abroad, and other normally positive contributions to our balance of trade in merchandise, has fallen into the red by some $40.8 billion, and could go to $80 billion by the end of this year. In short, we are fast on the road to becoming a debtor nation.

In the view of many, this trade deficit is at least as serious and damaging to our economic welfare as the other deficit we all aware of—the U.S. budget deficit. Certainly together, these two areas of deficit are a dark cloud over all Americans and the prosperity we work so hard to maintain.

Mr. Speaker, the Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade, which I have the honor to chair, will hold hearings September 20 and 25 on the trade deficit emergency we face. What are the causes of this problem, and what remedies are there that we have so far failed to implement?

I am hopeful, Mr. Speaker, that these hearings will increase the awareness and understanding of this Congress to the trade deficit problem, and motivate us and the administration to make any sacrifices that may be needed to correct it. In doing so, we will restore jobs to our economy and achieve greater economic security. Any such security we now have is in great jeopardy as long as these deficits continue.●

DONALD E. NORDLUND SPEAKS ON WORLD AGRICULTURE AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE POLICY

HON. RICHARD J. DURBIN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 8, 1984

● Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit for the record an important statement by Donald E. Nordlund, who heads one of America's leading agri-business corporations, the A.E. Staley Manufacturing Co. of Decatur, IL. Although you would be hardpressed to find the name Staley on your grocer's shelves, the corn and soybean products manufactured by the firm are mainstays of many grocery products.

From its several corn refining and soybean processing plants, Staley supplies soybean meal and corn feeds that are vital protein sources for the Nation's poultry and livestock. Corn wet milling facilities produce corn sweetners and starches, and ethanol plants make power alcohol for use in motor fuel blends. The company also manufacturers industrial starches from corn, potatoes, and tapioca. These products are essential in the production of paper, textiles, adhesives, building materials, and many other goods.

As Mr. Nordlund's statement points out, the company is a major exporter and, also is greatly affected by the importation of foreign products which compete with our domestic market for sweetners, starches, and vegetable oils. The growth potential of the company is great, but it is also very dependent on the availability of market here and abroad.

Under Don Nordlund's leadership, the Staley Co. has pioneered development of fructose corn sweeteners, soy protein products, and corn and soy feeds. Don was appointed as a member of President Reagan's Advisory Council on Private Sector Initiatives in 1983, and serves as chairman of the board of trustees at Millikin University in Decatur, IL.

The following statement was given before the Washington International Trade Association on July 31, 1984:

It is a privilege to be here today to address the topic of world agriculture and international trade policy—a frequently discussed subject, especially here in Washington. More often than not, the rhetoric centers on specifics—goals, confrontations and crises.

This afternoon let us step back from these immediate challenges and consider a root cause of many of them, one of the most serious problems confronting world agriculture—the conflict between policy and productivity. It is a reason for the troubled state of world agriculture today and of major political disputes between the United States and its traditional trading partners. If not resolved, it will prove even more disruptive in the future.

This is a time of paradox in international agriculture. Never has productivity been so great and, yet, the need to pronounced.

There are an estimated 500 million people on this earth who suffer from hunger and malnutrition. Starvation is a reality in some parts of the world.

The problem clearly is not one of productivity. World food production has made remarkable progress in recent decades. It has increased by 30 percent in the past 15 years alone. This upward trend has been even more pronounced in the developing countries, where food production has risen by some 40 percent.

One-third of this increased production is traceable to an expansion of land committed to agriculture. The other two-thirds has been the result of technological progress, including improved farming methods, wider and better application of fertilizers, and increased use of high-yield-plant varieties.

The United States has played a major role in the rise of world food production. Former Secretary of Agriculture Orville Freeman recently referred to the accomplishments of American agriculture as "the No. 1 production miracle in the history of mankind." Over the past 30 years, U.S. production of grain and oilseeds has nearly tripled.

This U.S. is not alone in such achievements. Since the 1960's, grain production in India has increased by 50 percent; soybean production in Brazil has risen thirteenfold; and grain harvests in the EC and Russia have doubled.

These impressive gains ironically have intensified a serious food supply-and-demand imbalance which exists in the world today.

The presence of surplus dairy products, feed grains, sugar and other agricultural commodities in producer nations around the globe is difficult to accept both from humanitarian as well as business points of view.

Several factors contribute to the dilemma. The recent strength of the dollar has made it difficult for some nations to purchase U.S. farm products as well as our industrial goods. In agriculture, however, a strong case can be made that the present disturbing paradox is largely the result of world agricultural policy, or rather, policy failure. The rise of the dollar in international markets is a recent phenomenon, but world agricultural policy has been leading us toward crisis for decades.

A large share of the responsibility for this failure must rest with the United States—the world's most prolific food producer—and its inability to take a firm lead in shaping international agricultural policy. Our political system with its changing administrations obviously makes consistent world leadership more difficult.

Since World War II, however, the United States essentially has pursued an agricultural trade policy based upon a free market concept. The theory is that an unencumbered international market encourages optimum production of agri-products and their trade throughout the world. The benefits include higher income for exporters/producers, such as the United States, and improved living standards for those nations needing food. We have doggedly pursued this concept for more than 40 years by setting an example for others to emulate.

Unfortunately, they have not done so. Instead, most of the world's governments have persisted in embracing the policies of protectionism—probably not surprising when one considers the relative strengths of the competing agricultural economies.

Two groups, however, have paid the price for this folly: the leading producer of food, the United States, and our customers—including those who are the world's neediest.

For many years, protectionist activities appeared to have little impact on U.S. agriculture. Through the 1950's, 1960's and 1970's, our food production and exports grew dramatically. We were able to ignore the reality that the United States was carrying the burden of world protectionism. The United States has traditionally approached the problem of domestic overproduction by reducing output and holding excess stocks within this country. Many other nations, however, react to overproduction by creating more demand through export of surpluses at below market prices, thereby transferring must of the cost to other producers, especially the United States.

Over the past few years, this burden has become too heavy. For example, in 1970 the U.S. share of world grain reserves was 40 percent; in 1982 it was more than 60 percent. During the 1970's the cost of domestic farm programs was around $4 billion per year. Last year this cost rose to $20 billion. The headlines about the Payment-In-Kind Program of 1983 rarely explained that it was our policy of holding excess stocks which caused the Government to accumulate mountains of grain in the first place.

Protectionism today occurs in every corner of the globe and covers practically all food, oilseeds, feedstuffs, and value-added, agricultural products. It comes in many forms.

In the Far East, for example, most governments have adopted rice policies favoring the consumer and discouraging the producer. As a result, rice production falls far below its potential and increasingly short of demand. In the end, the consumer is not benefiting from the policy. He is suffering. A free-market environment, based upon supply and demand, would stimulate greater production of rise for the entire world.

Coarse grains, such as corn, face difficult trade barriers in many parts of the world. This is especially true in the EC, where U.S. corn must enter under a variable levy. This restraint is designed to insulate European grain farmers from world market prices. Rather than pay this artificially high price for corn, European feed compounders have turned to the more economical corn gluten feed which has a duty-free status. U.S. corn gluten feed exports to the EC have risen sixfold since 1974.

The EC now is seeking to extend its protectionist policy to include corn gluten feed. The community is calling for a 3-million-ton limit on corn gluten feed imports with a tariff on shipments exceeding the quota. The United States has taken a firm stand—indicating that the idea is totally unacceptable and would provoke stiff retaliation. Our resolve is firm, in part, because there is justifiable fear that capitulation on this issue will encourage similar measures against soybean and soybean meal exports, a $4 billion a year market for U.S. agriculture.

On the subject of soybeans, the world market for them has become an arena for a new kind of protectionism. It might best be categorized as aggressive protectionism. That is—policies that go far beyond protecting a country's agri-industry to actually promote its expansion by whatever means necessary.

Leading proponents of this aggressive protectionism in soybean products are Brazil and Argentina. Both countries use differential export and domestic tax incentives that result in huge bonuses for their soybean processors. Soybean processing margins in Brazil and Argentina are often two to three times that of margins in the United States.

Along with Brazil and Argentina, the Common Market is working hard to protect and expand its oilseed industry. European processors receive restitutions on all major oilseeds and also benefit from an import duty on soybean oil.

The Common Market, Brazil and Argentina are not alone in promoting their oilseed industries by such practices. Mexico guarantees its crushers a profit—so they can bid up the international price of sunflower seed to levels that force U.S. processors to operate at negative margins.

In Malaysia, the palm oil industry enjoys a pre-export financing program and a differential export duty. This is the same industry that essentially was created by American dollars funneled through the World Bank and International Monetary Fund. The result: Malaysian palm oil today accounts for nearly 4 percent of the U.S. vegetable oil market and Malaysia has become the largest exporter of edible oils in the world.

Canada recently added a new dimension to aggressive protectionism. Canada simply changed the designation of the United States from a domestic to an export market so subsidized freight rates can be applied to shipments of canola meal and oil, sunflower oil, and other agri-commodities coming into this country.

The world sugar market is a classic example of the damage inflicted by protectionist policies.

At a recent London meeting, Dr. Helmut Ahlfeld, a noted authority on world sugar, concluded that there is no hope for self correction of the sugar surplus in the world market. He explained that sugar no longer responds to normal supply-and-demand factors. Dr. Ahlfeld stated that no real decrease in production is in sight despite world prices well below the cost of production. The reason is subsidization which has both protected the producers of sugar and encouraged them to dump their product on the market. As a result, refined sugar which costs an average of 20 to 25 cents per pound to produce around the world now sells for 7.5 to 8 cents.

Seven major sugar producers account for 70 percent of world cash sugar exports and each of the seven employs at least two and as many as eight types of subsidies. The European Economic Community has switched from a new sugar importer just a few years ago to the world's largest cash exporter by means of a complex system of high internal prices and heavy export subsidies. Other countries underwrite credit and manipulate exchange rates. To illustrate—the real cost of borrowing for Brazil's sugar industry has been as low as a minus 20.8 percent in recent years.

To compound the problem, talks on a new international sugar accord collapsed last month, setting the stage for dumping of more than 2 million tons on the world market in January when the current agreement expires.

I cite these examples not as criticism of the motives of the nations employing protectionism, but rather to focus your attention on the realities of world agricultural trade. Protectionism is rampant around the world, from the Far East, to South America and throughout Europe, encompassing practically all agri-products.

It has been a prime reason for the present underutilization of the world's leading producer of agricultural goods—the United States. Consider that more than one-fourth of the U.S. soybean industry's processing capacity presently is unused; that 75 million acres of farmland were left idle last year; and that this Nation has lost substantial world market share in poultry, flour, pasta, wheat, wine, pork and beef, soybean products and more.

Unfortunately, problems created by foreign protectionism will likely become worse before they get better. One of the principal reasons is the failure of such policy to recognize the continuing evolution of agri-technology. If not taken into account, it will force policy and production even further apart in the future.

The accomplishments in agricultural production in recent decades will be only a prelude to even greater strides in the years ahead. These strides will come from many technical areas, including breakthroughs in genetics and bioengineering.

Agriculture in years to come will include new methods of water management. Laser beams already are being used to prepare fields for better water usage; infrared guns will be employed to monitor plants for water stress; field conditions will be measured by sensors tied to weather satellites to aid in irrigation scheduling. Farmers will apply chemicals to their crops to inhibit water loss. This development alone could increase corn yields by 15 percent, according to some experts.

Genetic engineering, in particular, will have enormous impact on the world's food system. There are some 170 laboratories in the United States presently working on cell fusion, gene transformation, plant tissue culture and other technologies to produce new concepts in food productivity and human nutrition. Their work will swiftly advance the development of food crops with more resistance to drought, heat or cold; crops with improved nutrition and shorter growing cycles; crops more responsive to fertilizers and with greater yields.

It is interesting to consider that about 95 percent of the world's food is related to plant life. There are 350,000 species of plants on Earth, but only about 300 are used for food production. Of these, only 20 would be considered mainstays in the world food system. Obviously, there is much room for new crop innovation through plant genetics.

In the future, worthless plants, such as milkweed, may be sources of vegetable oil; even giant ragweed, the enemy of hayfever sufferers, may be cultivated as a protein source. All of this may sound far fetched, but remember, it was little more than 50 years ago that farmers in Illinois had to be persuaded to plant soybeans as a cash crop.

One particularly intriguing concept is the development of salt-tolerant crops. Throughout the world, there are an estimated 2 billion irrigated acres today that are affected adversely by saline conditions; much of this land is in arid climates. On these acres, seeds do not germinate properly, and plant growth is reduced. Imagine the increase in food production on these acres through the development of salt-tolerant plants. Already work is progressing on the development of salt-resistant rice, wheat, barley, lettuce, peanuts, and many more foodstuffs.

The upshot of this technological wave will be increasing supplies of agricultural goods—making protectionist policies even more antiquated and cumbersome. The present mountains of unused food and feedstuffs in the developed nations will be pushed higher by agritechnology. From a business viewpoint, rising market demand will go unserved; from a humanitarian perspective, hunger and health problems will increase; the food gap will grow larger with serious political implications. Unless—a change of direction is achieved in world agricultural policy. It must begin here at home.

There is much discussion about Congress drafting a market-oriented, 1985 farm bill. Some people seem to consider this a new idea. It is, in fact, the same philosophy that U.S. policy makers have espoused—and our foreign competition has ignored—for years. It is a strategy that has met with little success and will do so again unless preceded by a strong dose of realism. Domestic farm legislation cannot unilaterally resolve the protectionist practices employed around the world. We must have the full cooperation of other nations—which has not occurred.

The United States, therefore, must use caution in formulating a market-oriented farm bill next year, or we will hand over another share of our shrinking world markets to foreign competition. In essence, we will continue to reward them for their protectionist ways.

Before working toward true market orientation, the United States must be prepared to fight fire with fire on a selective basis. Self defense against protectionist policies must be incorporated into the next farm bill. It need not be incompatible with greater market orientation. It need not take the form of across-the-board protectionism or be approached as a permanent feature of our agricultural policy.

Self defense can be accomplished in two ways. First, the farm bill must grant authority for the prevention or limitation of damage to efficient domestic producers, suffered as the result of inequitable export practices on the part of foreign governments. Second, the legislation must authorize the Government to encourage exports in the face of unfair international market conditions. This authority might include expanded use of Pub. L. 480, credit buy-downs, counter trade assistance, even outright cash payments.

These tools ironically are required if the United States is to be persuasive in its effort to lead the world away from protectionism and toward a market-oriented agricultural system. I would emphasize that such authority must be used judiciously and in a responsive manner, but it must be used—for the hour is late for American agriculture.

Exemplary action and patience have not worked in setting ag policy. Without a meaningful change, of course, this Nation's largest and most vital business will slip into the present state of many of our smokestack industries today.

It must not happen. Fortunately, there have been encouraging signs that a new awareness is present among our policy makers. It is a growing understanding of the world of agriculture as it is—not as we would wish it. Now, the challenge is to transfer this awareness into action.●

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, August 9, 1984, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.
